Restoring Bombardment Power

For the Navy, the new lightweight, automated gun is an integral part of its plan to restore some of the hombardment power of its surface warships, particulary against shore targets.

In recent years, as the Navy became reoccupied with missiles, the gun has been demoted as the principal weapon of its warships to the point that some Pentagon critics laughingly refer to the newer classes of ships as "gunless wonders." Most of the Navy's warships now carry one or at most two rapid-firing fivench guns, which is the same caliber used ny destroyers in World War IL.

Independence Referendum Promised by Quebec Leader

By HENRY GINIGER

MONTREAL, Nov. 21-René Lévesque says that the new provincial government he will establish in Quebec oext Thursday will respect its commitment to govern within the present federal structure, but that it does not expect Canada to oppose by force any majority will for the inde-pendence of the province.

In an interview, Mr. Lévesque, who led the Parti Québécois to victory in legisla-tive elections last Monday, said that as tive elections last Monday, said that as Premier he would run a provincial government uotil such time aa Quebec's population decided, in a referendum, whether it wanted independence or not. "If it is no, we have a four-year man-

"If it is no, we have a tour-year mandate and that will be it until the end of the mandate," he said. "If it is yes, then we will have the necessary pressure for final negotiationa because I don't see Canada—I have too much respect for Canadian democracy—holding by force a very well identified population saying "We want out."

Mr. Levesque acknowledged that at the moment a majority of Quebec'a popula-tion was against independence, although tion was against independence, although the insisted that the minority in favor was growing. He said he believed that good government by the Parti Québécois would help to turn the majority the other way. But he added that "good government is an objective in itself."

'Arrogant Federalism' of Ottawa

A short, ascetic-looking man with wispy gray hair. Mr. Lévesque spoke quietly and in easy, colloquial and virtually unacceoted English, of his hopes for an independent Quebec living in association with the rest of Canada on a basis of equality, able to promote its French identity and to develop free of the 'paralyzed federalism or, worse than that, the arrogant and over-centralized federalism" of Ottawa.

The principle of seeking, in about two years, a popular mandate on iodependence through referendum was inserted in the party program 'two years ago, Mr. Lévesque said that the promise of a referendum had belped the party overcome the campaign tactic of its chief rival, the Liberal Party, which sought to portray the Quebec election that brought Mr. Le-vesque to power as a choice between separation and a Liberal government.

But the separatist program also called for the government "to set immediately in motion the process of accession to overeignty." This would be done through a law authorizing the government to ne-gotiate with Ottawa for the transfer of ower to Quebec.

Mr. Lévesque acknowledged that the imultaneous commitments to a referendum and to immediate independence moves created an "awkward" situation that would have to be reconciled. He indi-cated that this would be done through a Quebec assembly resolution reaffirming and making concrete the objective of in-

in such fields as taxation, immigration and social welfara "because these powers are all tied to the promotion of a minority

But, he went on, Quebec governments have always run into, and more than ever is asbestos. with Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Tru-Talks With Ottawa to Go On Such negotiations will continue, Mr. evesque said, rejecting the idea that a referendum was required before the talks could go on. "We don't need a mandate," he said. "We inherit it."

Although he appeared doublous that his government would get more out of Ottawa than past ones have, Mr. Lesque made no specific mention of a unilateral declaration of independence in the event that talks failed. Such a move is explicit, however, in the party's program. The same law that would authorize the government to seek agreement with Ottawa would also authorize it, "in the case where it would have to proceed unilaterally," to assume "the exercise of all communications and publishing powers of a sovereign state, making sure should be tied to Quebec ownership in advance of the support of the Quebec-ers through a referendum."

Provincial Finances a Concern

Mr. Lévesque said his immediate vorries were the financial and budgetary situations. He is inheriting a deficit of close to a billion dollars. He said that is government would seek to reapportion expenditure to make a start in fulfilling the party's social welfare program, but he barred a social revolution "because we cannot afford it." In the long run, he said. Quebec will seek to bring home not only political power but economic

He said he had concluded 16 years ago that "there is oo halfway house between federalism and self-government."

"You can't be half in and balf out, and the problem is that what we used to call special status is unfeasible in an old-fashioned federal atructure," he said. In his view the future lies in economic association "because I do not see the Caoadian version of federalism loosening up enough in any way to give a decent and respectable framework for what we seek as our national affirmatioo."

Revolutionary State Rejected

Mr. Lévesque said that be would have meetings with United States and Canadian business leaders and appeal to them to judge his new government on the facts. He denounced as ignorant or bostile charges that he was plaoning to establish another Cuba or Chile. "This has nothing to dp with reality. Quebec will not be revolutionary in the seose of being tied to some foreign bloc or interest. It is just screwy to think that way."

Mr. Levesque was reluctant to pin an ideological label on his party, but he agreed that it could be described as social democratic and expressed admiration for the social democratic governments of

He outlined some of the major policies and attitudes that the Parti Québecois will seek to apply to assure the ascendency of the French majority, stressing immigration and the ecocomy.

He said that he would seek an "immigration policy that we control as a ma-jority without discrimination on the basis of race or creed—because we are not a primitive tribe." He added: "I think Quebec is moving toward a more demoratic outlook than ever before, but with an immigration policy that has a seleciveoess that any small country would

"All the demographers have been telling us that if something definite isn't done and it has to be civilized—then we wil! eventually fade away like the Acadians in the Maritime Provinces or the Cajuns in Louisiana," he said. "We're sure as hell not going to let that bappen." 'Foreign iovestment has to be taken into accouot," Mr. Lévesque said. "It has always been here very substantially, particularly from the United States, and io many ways it has been essential to our development. It has to stay and I see no reason why it couldn't stay as long as it is profitable. But we will not count on it with the kind of begging attitude that was too often the case in the past."

"We are the first world producer and that they have done a lousy job for our own people and for our development. There are about a half a dozen companies that have not treated the people who work for them well and have not done the development job we think should have been done with such a basic resource and-it is a well-known part of our program-we think we should eventually get control back."

Mr. Lévesque also mentioced forest resources that are publicly owned but are worked by private companies through recewable concessions. He said examination and reorganization of all the existing concessions would be accelerated.

whether public or private.

quentiv to the party program, he remained silent on one aspect of it that could seriously affect relations with the United States. The program of the party calls on an independent Quebec to withdraw from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and from joint Canadian-American defense programs in the interest of a "pacifist" foreign policy.

Senator Finds Fear at Camp for Rhodesian Refugees

By JOHN F. BURNS

CHIBAVAVA, Mozambique, Nov. 21-Fears engendered by Rhodesian strikes into Mozambique were starkly apparent vesterday when Seoator Dick Clark, Democrat of Iowa, journeyed through the lushly vegetated bushland of west-central Mozambique to visit the largest of three Rhodesian refugee camps.

"As soon as you arrived, many of our people ran into the bush," said Richard Movo, aged 24, formerly a conductor oo buses running between Salisbury, the Rhodesian capital, and the border town of Umtali. He told Senator Clark that visits to the camp had been followed oo three recent occasions by low overflights of Rhodesian iets.

Fears of an attack have beset the 14,000 residents of Tronga Camp, about 25 miles from the border, since Rhodesian forces struck at the Nyazonia Camp, about 100 miles further north, oo Aug. 9.

The Rhodesians, charging that the camp was a guerrilla training base, estimated that they killed at least 350 people.

The Mozambique Government, supported by the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, maintained that the residents of the camp were civilians with no operational connections to the Zimbabwe People's Army, the guerrilla force operating from bases in Mozambique.

China Is Linking 'Gang of 4' To Its Economic Troubles

By FOX BUTTERFIELD

HONG KONG (Nov. 21) — Months before Chiang Ching and three other disgraced members of the Politburo were arrested on charges, among others, that they had sabotaged industrial production, the Chinese press was inveighing against certain production, the Chinese press was inveighing against certain "class eoemies" who engage in "sabotage and beating. smashing and looting."

China While it was difficult to judge exactly what was involved. American businessmen who import textiles from China got some import textiles from China got some hint of the problem recently when they discovered that garments, most of them from Shanghal, were arriving with peculiar faults. In some cases a white blouse had one green button, in another case a shirt bad holes; in still another, packages of $60 silk shirts were perfect except for lok spots, some on the collar, some on the front.

When the businessmen complained to Chinese officials at the recent Canton fair, they were told it was "sabotage by the gang of four." That phrase is the current epithet for Miss Chiang, Mao Tse-tung's widow, and her associates, Chang Chun-chiao, Wang Hung-wen and Yao Wen-yuan, who worked together in Shanghai during the Cultural Revolution which ran from 1966 to 1969.

By itself the reference to sabotage is not a satisfactory explanation, but when combined with information disclosed currently in charges against the Chiang group, it seems to account for some of the troubles that have plagued the economy this year and to offer a reason for the action against the group by senior party officials and army commanders.

According to an article last week in the party newspaper, Jenmin Jih Pao, Miss Chiang and her associates "did not know how to work a machine," but they repeatedly Instigated workers in key industries to strike or to struggle with factory managers, the ostensible purpose being to carry out Mao's call for revolution. They reportedly maintained that "if revolution is carried out well, production will automatically go up."

Their hidden purpose, the paper indicated, was to topple the factory managers and undercut Prime Minister Chou En-lai, who had proposed an ambitious program to modernize the economy before he died last January. As a result of their actions there was widespread labor unrest over the last two years and an apparently sharp decline in the rate of industrial growth this year.

In a case cited in a broadcast from Kiangsi Province last week, production in a major tractor factory halted between January and the arrest of the four last month because people allied with them in the plant had argued that to push production was "rightist." In Hangchow, another article in the paper said, several visits by Mr. Wang led to trouble among workers that forced Peking to send troops to occupy factories.

The labor troubles seem to have stemmed from diverse causes, but they all grew out of policies adopted during the Cultural Revolution. There were factional squabbles in factories dating to the disputes that arose in the Cultural Revolution, there was conflict between managers and workers over attempts to restore factory discipline, which had broken down during the Cultural Revolution, and there was unhappiness over wages, which Mao had largely frozen to ward off what he saw as the evil of bourgeois material incentives.

Hua Kuo-feng, the new Chairman of the Chinese Communist Party, seems to be moving rapidly to try to restore industrial discipline and end the factional quarrels. On Thursday Jenmin Jih Pao cited for the first time a quotation attributed to Mr. Hua that read, "Be meticulous in organization and direction,"—far from Mao's ringing calls for revolution,

How far Mr. Hua can go in granting wage increases is a question with broad implications for the rate of economic growth. Analysts of Chinese affairs here believe the new leaders may be

Now, from France, comes a symbol of debating this now as part of their reassessment of the fifth five-year plan, which was due to start last January but was a casualty of the infighting in Peking.

Although nearly every day brings fresh accusations against Miss Chiang and ber three associates, the analysts are also interested in the effect on other officials. There is little evidence, but there are some indications.

Several provinces, including Hunan, Shansi and Fukien, have reported that the disgraced Polithuro members had enrolled local "black liaison points" who "picked up black instructions and created disorder behind the backs of the provincial party committee in an attempt to topple a number of leading cadres."

cadres."

Wall posters in Changsha, capital of Hunan, have denounced middle-level party officials and representatives of the federation of trade unions by name for their reported links to the "gang of four." The posters, which have been seen by foreign visitors, demand that the accused confess. What will happen to them then is not specified.

to them then is not specified.

There are Chioese who evidently hope that it will be the worst. A trade official told an American businessman at the Canton fair. "There are still a lot of heads that will have to touch the floor."

Some of the most curious allegations against Miss Chiang involve what are described as oourgeois personal habits. It seems that she enjoyed the perquisites of power while imposing spartan control over dress, sexual behavior and entertainment. According to recent provincial broadcasts, she imported hundreds of movies from Hollywood for private viewing and ordered libraries to send her copies of "ancient books on emperors, kings, ministers and generals," though they were not available to the public, so she could "learn how to become emperor."

When she toured, a broadcast from Hainan Island reported, "she was very fussy about clothing, food, quarters and means of traveling." Officials of a state farm that she visited in 1970 recalled:

"She was not satisfied with the bed and bedsheets after they had been changed several times. She demanded that within one kilometer from her residence there must be no noise from motor vehicles, poultry and dogs. Motor vehicles delivering things to her should switch off the engine one kilometer away and then be pushed by more than 20 strong militamen."

Another time, on a trip to Canton, she reportedly became annoyed by noise from a shipward and ordered that work be stopped while she clear.

work be stopoed while she slept.

Although these charges might seem frivolous, they convey an important message to the Chinese. Policy has been viewed as an expression of personal character since the time of Confucius, and thus bad policy can be seen as the product of evil character. Consequently, accusations against disgraced leaders tend to be more personal than they would be, say, in the United States.

How Operation Works

Vasectomy is a quick and uncomplicated operation in which a man's vas defenced. which is increasing by a million a month and which is widely regarded as the most pressing national problem.

In the birth-control campaign, begun six months ago, the Government's goal is to reduce the annual birth rate from 35 per thousand to 25 per thousand by 1984. Critics of the Government assert that the pressure put on local officials to fill sterilization quotas assigned from above has led to instances of coercion; in parts of northern India there have been outbreaks of rioting over compulsory

One requirement set in 1969 by the Navy was for a major caliber, long-range gun for destroying "hard targets," such as bunkers, caves and dug-in coastal defense positions. A requirement was also laid down for a gun that would have a longer range than Soviet naval guns. The G.A.O. letter contained a table showing the number of rounds the gun would have to fire to "kill" a bunker, a truck convoy and a troop concentration at longer ranges. The exact figures conin the table were classified, but an unclassified version of the latter obtained by The New York Times contains :

The 11 men were killed March 11 io the second of two methane gas explosions at the Scotia No. 1 mine, deep inside Big Black Mountain. About 150 friends and relatives packed the small church where Mr. Sturgill learned to read and write to pay their last respects to a man who said only a few hours before he entered the mine that he was "not afraid to die."

Earlier today, J.B. Holbrook, another miner killed in the second explosinn, was buried on Myrl Hill in Mayking as a cold wind whipped around the grieving family

He said the two groups went into the mine in an effort to get the investigation under way before a one-week moratorium began today on all activity at the Scotia mine out of respect for the men killed there last March.

Mr. Phillips said the rock dust sampling was done so that chemists could decide whether the "incombustibility" of the dust conformed to Federal regulations.

Mining safety standards require companies to sprinkle rock dust in mines to dilute the highly explosive cootent of coal dust.

The Leadership of Congress

The newly elected 95th Congress will have a more sweeping change in leadership than any previous Congress in this century. Mike Mansfield of Montana, the majority leader, and Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the minority leader, are retiring in the Senate, while Speaker Carl Albert of Oklahoma is retiring in the House. In hoth chambers, party whips are seeking the top leadership posts and, if unsuccessful, are unlikely to continue in their present jobs, thereby opening up those positions.

Although other qualified candidates are in the running, Secator Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota is clearly the logical choice of the Democrats as their new floor leader. He was majority whip from 1961 to 1964, presided over the Senate during the next four years as Vice President and since returning as a Senator has again placed his mark on much legislation.

If a majority leader is to be not only a Senate insider but also speak to and for the public on great issues before Congress, Mr. Humphrey is the indisputable cboice. Indeed, Democrats in the country and the public generally would think it odd if Democratic Senators were to pass bim over.

On the Republican side, Senator Robert Griffin of Michigan is not the commanding personality that Mr. Humphrey is but, as minority whip, he has strong credentials to succeed Senator Scott as his party's floor leader. Senator Griffin is a hard-working, even-tempered legislator well regarded by his colleagues. He stands squarely in the center of his party. This may be a critical advantage since both of his putative opponents-Senators Howard Baker of Tennessee and John Tower of Texasare regarded as somewhat closer to the G.O.P. right wing.

In the House of Representatives, it is a foregone conclusion that the new Speaker will be Representative Thomas P. O'Neill of Massachusetts. But a spirited fourway contest has developed to succeed him as majority leader. The candidates are Richard Bolling of Missouri, Phillip Burton of California, John J. McFall of California, and James C. Wright Jr. of Texas.

Normally, Representative McFall, the respected majority whip, would be the favorite because his post is often a point of departure for higher office. But Mr. McFall has been upstaged by his fellow Californian, the younger, more aggressive Mr. Burton.

Mr. Burton has moved forward rapidly in his 12 years in the House, first using the chairmanship of the liberaloriented Democratic Study Group as his power base and now serving as chairman of the House Democratic Caucus. But when the career of former Representative Wayne Hays collapsed in scandal, it may have seriously damaged Mr. Burton's prospects. The House Democratic leadership had tried to oust Mr. Hays from his chairmanship of the House Administration Committee in January 1975, before the recent scandal broke, hut Mr. Burtoo teamed up with Mr. Hays and saved the latter's job.

As a Texan, Representative Wright would like to renew the alliance between the Southwest and the Northeast that has dominated the House since 1940 with Speakers Sam Rayhurn of Texas and Carl Albert of Oklahoma sharing power with Speaker John McCormack of Massachusetts and Speaker-to-be O'Neill, also of Massachusetts. Mr. Wright has followed traditional coalition-building tactica to enlist support from different groups and regions. But it is doubtful that Mr. Wright, a middle-of-the-roader, can gain the leadership of what bas become a predominantly liberal party in the House.

Representative Bolling would seem to offer the best match between his talents and the needs of the Democratic majority. As a senior member of the Rules Committee, he has been effective in the daily grind of legislative business. As Vice Chairman of the Joint Econonic Committee, he has shown himself to be a thoughtful and incisive critic of public policy. He is a liberal by conviction and a negotiator and peacemaker by temperament. He has unquestioned integrity.

Mr. Bolling is "a House man," having served for 28 years and having a deep understanding of the House's strengths and weaknesses. He is the author of two books about the House and chaired a bipartisan committee on reform of the committee structure.

After eight years of divided party control of the Federal Government, Democrats in the House will be evolving a new pattern of independence and cooperation as they work once again with a Democratic President. In this period. Representative Bolling is ideally qualified by intellect, experience, philosophical outlook and political skill to manage the new Administration's legislative program on the floor and at the same time articulate and defend the interests of the House as a great democratic

The disconcerting strength gathered by sentratism in Canada contains a relevant lesson for the United States and its approach to bilingual education. While language is by no means the only factor in the Canadian discoro. there can be no question that the linguistic division between French- and English-speaking Canadians has severely intensified their other differences.

It would be ludicrous distortion to suggest that the United States confronts any danger of actual political separatism as a result of the possible growth of Spanishspeaking enclaves. But it is oo exaggeration to warn that the present encouragement given to making such enclaves permanent, in the mistaken view that they are an expression of positive pluralism, points the road to cultural, economic and political divisiveness.

The reason why such a warning appears appropriate is that political splinter groups within the Spanishspeaking community, and among educators, are misinterpreting the goals of bilingual education in New York as a means of creating a Spanish-speaking power

We fully support the proper use of bilingual teaching as a pedagogically sound means of easing pupils' way toward full msstery of English and of making possible effective participation in the general business of learning from the very moment a non-English-speaking youngster enters school. But the purpose of such instruction must be to create English-speaking Americans with the least possible delay.

Concern over divisions created by the absence of a common language has played a vital part in the huilding of a cohesive nation from the time of America's birth. In 1753, Benjamin Franklin feared that German settlers in Pennsylvania would endanger the preservation "of our language and even of our Government" unless schools in English were established for all children.

Without exaggerating the threat to America's nationhood now that English has prevailed, it nevertheless remains pertinent to warn against a misguided linguistic separatism that, while it may seem to promise its advocates limited political and ideological power, can only have the effect of condemning to permanent economic and social disauvantage those who cut themselves off from the majority culture.

A Cradle of History

It is safe to say that no historic structure in the English-speaking world carries with it deeper emotional connotations. To Americans no less than to Britons, its mighty pillars and vaulting arches symbolize the spiritual heart of a great and gifted people.

It is essentially a house of worship; but it is also a shrine and a sanctuary, the resting place of kings and queens and statesmen and scientists and poets, a memorial to the exalted and the humble. It is a place of pilgrimage. It is Westminster Abbey.

This magnificent structure that has stood on its present site near the Thames for more than seven centuries is now in desperate need of exterior repair. Its outer stonework is crumhling under the gradual weight of ages past and the more recent effects of London's polluted air. The relatively modest sum of $15 million is needed to save the Abbey, of which $8 million has already been raised privately in Britain.

Now a call for help bas gone out to Americans; and those who wish to participate in saving the Abbey may send their tax-deductible contributions to: The Historic Churches Preservation Fund, care of Westminster Abbey Appeal, Room 3300, 60 Broadway, New York City 10005.

Should Mankind Hide?

An extraordinary warning has come from Sir Martin Ryle, Britain's Astronomer Royal and Nobel laureate in physics. Sir Martin is worried that some of his fellow scientists may give away the fact that the human race exists to alien intelligences elsewhere in the cosmos.

Such a historic security leak, Sir Martin fears, might result in the invasion and conquest of Earth by hostile beings who might view Earth and its inhabitants as a source of food, slaves, minerals and the like. Put another way. Sir Martin has raised the question: Should mankind hide in this obscure corner of a tiny solar system attached to a minor star?

Some observers, cognizant of the daily volume of electronic transmissions on this planet, may wonder whether mankind can hide, whether signals from radio, television or other stations may not already have been picked up.

Too many uncomfortable precedents from Earth's own history argue against a cavalier dismissal of Sir Martin's warning. Why should potential visitors from Alpha Centauri, or some more distant star, be expected to be more merciful to earthlings than Europeans were to American Indians only a few centuries ago? Or, if the visitors were of another physical form, why should they not see the same virtues in domesticating human beings that men realized long ago when they domesticated cattle, horses, dogs and cats? Or impressed other human beings into slavery? But to live it to accept dangers. On balance, the chances of gain from communication with alien intelligence greatly exceed the chances of harm. Men have already returned from landings on the moon; instruments sent by human beings have already reported from Mercury, Venus, Mars and Jupiter. There is no evidence that humanity bas close, intelligent neighbors.

Given the immensity of space, the nearest intelligent beings are not likely to exist closer than hundreds or thousands of light years away, at the very least. Should they detect the existence of Earth's civilization, the odds would seem to be high that they know far more than mankind about utilizing nature's bounty and thus bave no need for such crude techniques of appropriation as were employed by those who followed Columbus to the New Yorld and other human conquerors of new territories. The universe seems too rich to require an advanced race to look hungrily on Earth's meager patrimony.

Sir Martin appears to pay too little heed to the possibility of gain from such communication. The vartness of the universe might contain beings who long ago found the cure for cancer, solved the problems of taming thermonuclear energy, and routinely practice genetic engineering for the benefit of their species. In short, information transmitted from alien intelligences could improve human existence. Despite Sir Martin's eminence there is no reason to assume that alien intelligence among the stars must be hostile or predatory.

Westway: The Harm-the Good

To the Editor:

In ber Nov. 16 letter, Maureen Cal-lanan asked, "Whom do those opposed to Westway represent?"

Among the many groups opposed to Westway, the Association of Village Homeowners represents approximately own buildings in Greenwich Village (not absentee landlords or real estate speculators, but people who live in and are deeply coocerned with the life of their community). In 1974, when the Westway plan was first presented, we polled our membership. The response was overwhelmingly against the construction of such an expensive community-destroying plan.

As resident-owners (and often rentcootrolled landlords as well), we are very much aware of the financial problems of this city. We have had our taxes raised over and over again, and our services cut to the bone. We know better than most bow badly New York needs money and services.

But we think that the priorities in this case are badly skewed. As indicated in the City. Club report, the city does not need this buge, expensive highway. It does need transportation along the West Side. But the Westway plan exemplifies overkill, involving millions and millions of dollars which could be better spent in other ways, to the benefit of the city.

Among others who oppose Westway are the community boards which represent the areas that will be affected by it. The city environmentalists oppose Westway hecause they are concerned for our lungs and our eyes. The mass transit people oppose Westway because they know that most people working in New York use mass transit. Even suburban commuters use it, and they'd like it improved.

The truth is that Westway will cost an awful lot of tax money (both Federal and local) and will lower our "quality of life"—that elusive element which makes staying in New York worth it. Let's have the roadway we need, not this extravagant hoondoggle. MIRIAM L. LEE

As a supporter of Westway and a resident of Chelsea, through which 35 percent of the proposed roadway will run, allow me to point out that there is a large body of support in this com-

Unlike opponents of Westway, we do not find the prospect of Westway unthinkable": rather we welcome it as a plan which will benefit our neighborhood in the following ways.

1. Westway will provide access to the river, now denied us. Any new construction along the Hudson will be scaled-down so that Chelsea will not be walled in from the river.

2. It will-provide us with desperately needed parks. Chelsea bas one of the lowest parks-per-capita ratios in Man-

3. Westway will relieve our community from the intolerable noise and air pollution that currently surround us. The stacks from Westway will be properly vented and the cars will be underground. It will generate jobs and have a positive impact in the city's economy.

Chelsea is a "vigorous" community. It will be even more so when we get rid of the traffic that thunders along Ninth Avenue, our Main Street, and invades the side streets, seeking short cuts to the tunnels and bridges on the East Side .

It is pure fantasy to believe, as some do, that not replacing the West Side Highway will make the traffic go away. In the years from 1972 to 1975 river crossings remained virtually the same. This, despite gas shortages, higher prices of gas and increased hridge and tunnel tolls. Some opponents of Westway have called for the creation of a road-level expressway along West Street as a substitute for the West Side Highway. For the 60,000 residents of Chelsea this would be a disaster. ### To Punish a Criminal

To the Editor:

The colonization of Australia and part of the United States shows that there is a better way of handling criminals than locking them away for years at an average cost of $20,000 each per year.

There are islands or remote, underpopulated areas in this country where these antisocials can be sent with a grubstake to work for their livelihood and form their own society and their own government. They are running the prisons anyhow. If their families want to go with them, they should be permitted to do so. Fear of the unknown is a great deterreot, and it should be tried to bold down crime. With the money saved, a massive effort could be made to segregate juvenile delinquents from the crime environment by putting them to work in conservation corps tied to very intensive educational programs; even to the extent of a college degree at twenty-one, when they will be permitted to come back to society. As for executing the cold-blocked murderer, a "trial by ordeal" could be revived. Say, dropping him off some 200 or 300 miles from any settlementain the wilds of Alaska in midwinter. with a bare survival kit. If he makes it, he has earned a chance in some new SOLOMON S. STORCH. The Victims

To the Editor:

Terrorized, elderly victims, "often frail, vulnetable, unable to defend themselves," do not kick their oppressors out of the way. They try to get around them without being attacked. The old have not the strength to defend themselves, let alone to attack those who are in ambush to assault them. The door held for a senior citi zen by a "kid" (affectionate term for those who beat and even kill their 'orey") is often the door through which the victim is pushed to be mugged.

Suddenly, in the middle of Ms. Klemesrud's Nov. 12 article about the elderly in the Bronx, a detective is quoted blaming the victims for the war that is being waged on them. I would like to see the bruises and the broken booes of the "kids" whom the elderly have kicked. Was there observable evidence that kids have been kicked by their elderly victims? Have any of the "kids" been killed by the senior citizens? In other neighborhoods the victims may be Irish or Italian or hlack. Have they also provoked the attack upon them by the "kids"? attack upon them hy the "kids"?

MILWAUKEE—One of the unhappy realities that Jimmy Carter must soon face is that his election has not put an end to his need for extensive political campaigning. He must now persuade tha American people to support his programs.

An election does not, in and no itself, confer power. What it does graft is a status from which power can be exercised. But the power is still something that flows from persuasion, and Presidents quickly discover that the persuasive process must be restarted with each issue.

This problem is compounded in Mr. Carter's case. Normally, a President has a "honeymoon" in which, for a few months, Congress assumes be has the public consent and approves just about everything he sends them. This time it's different. Normally, a man elected to the Presidency has a record that the people know, and it is reasonable to believe that the electorate had a fairly good idea about what he would do once he stepped into the Oval Office. Mr. Carter is unknown.

It is not his fault. There has probably been no successful candidate in this century who has taken as many clear and decisive stands on as many issues. His problem is that for most of the voters he had no record before he announced his candidacy. It is the pre-candidacy record that most Americans watch for clues to substantive policy. They pay little attention to the positions taken during a campaign.

The situation becomes very clear when any effort is made to question voters on the probable nature of the Carter Presidency. Many of the answers are friendly, some are unfriendly. But none is very specific. They boil down to a belief that he will be an activist, "take-charge" type of President. Those who wish to see more governmental action are friendly; those who wish to see less are still unrecoociled.

This doesn't have anything to do with the size of Mr. Carter's margin. In Presidential elections, a teo-vote margin is just as decisive as ten million. The winner suddenly doubles in height and, within a few weeks, many who voted for Gerald R. Ford will have convinced themselves that they actually supported Mr. Carter.

This is not altogether sycophancy or a venal desire to hop aboard the bandwagon. Rather, it is merely pragmatic recognition that we have placed our destiny in Mr. Carter's bands for the next four years and, whatever we may bave thought of him on Nov. 1, we now want bim to be a good President.

The feeling that Mr. Carter is still an unknown quantity has, in my judgment, deep roots. I suspect that no one trusts a statement made by a political candidate during a campaign and that our people only take pronouncements by leaders seriously when they are not running for office. There is a good reason for this attitude, Lyndon B. Johnson pledged that American boys would not be sent to do the fighting that should be done by Asian boys. And Richard M. Nixon was going to restore confidence in the integrity of government.

From my nwn experience, I doubt seriously whether these men were "lying" in the sense that they told deliberate falsehoods. It is closer to the truth to realize that no man really knows what he is going to do once he is inaugurated. Issues look a lot different to a man whose responsibility is to act upon them than to a man whose sole obligation is to comment on them. This does not alter the national skepticism toward campaign speeches.

In most instances, however, Presidential candidates have had some exposure to the public on the national political scene. This means that they have a record. It may not indicate fully what they will do, but at least the voters feel they know the philosophies with which they are dealing.

Mr. Carter's problem is that almost anything he does is going to come as something of a surprise. It does not matter how often he has reviewed his programs during the campaign or how faithfully he will fulfill his campaign promises. He must still do a "sales job," and his success as President will depend on how quickly be defines his projects in Presidential terms and proceeds to take them to the people.

54-40 and No Fight

By William Safire

WASHINGTON—At a small reception following a State Dinner in Paris in February, 1969, I found myself standing next to President Charles de Gaulle. Anxious to appear knowledgeable in world affairs, I mumbled something about how he had really stirred Canadians up a couple of years before with his cry of "vive le Quebec libre" to a crowd in Montreal.

He looked at me through eyeglass lenses thick as Coke-bottle bottoms with eyes that seemed to wonder why a President of the United States would bring along such a simpleton as a member of his staff. "One day," de Gaulle stated, with absolute certainty, "Quebec will be French."

The ghost of le grand Charles must have smiled imperiously last week when the Province of Quebec astounded Canada and the world by electing two-thirds of its representatives to the National Assembly from the Separatist Party.

Many worried Canadians, pointing to public opinion polls in Quebec that do not seem to favor independence, say that the regional election was only a rejection of the Liberal Party leadership on other issues. They insist it cannot be interpreted as a vote for separation of Quebec's six million French Canadians from the 16 million English-speaking Canadians across North America.

But movements gathering momentum lend respectability to ideas previously held to be uothinkable. Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau, himself a French Canadian, was thought to be a symbol of a unified Canada's ability to accommodate minority desires. However, Mr. Trudeau—with his praise of Castro, his rejection of Talwan, and his foolhardy manipulation of Canada's economy—is losing cootrol.

The head of the victorious Parti Quebécois, René Lévesque, plans a provincial referendum on independence two years from now. Since a chance exists that any separatist referendum victory would be followed by secessioo, the federalists who believe in one Canada will probably put the issue to a natioowide vote hefore that time. Separatists, who might be a majority in Quebec, would still be a minority in the nation—and such a decision is the whole nation's to decide.

What does this mean to the United States? The possibility now exists of an argument to our immediate north on the subject of "self-determination" vs. "oationhood." Such oational arguments have a way of encouraging hotheads and becoming fierce (in our own case, it took the South over a century to triumph).

As a neighbor, the United States in the loog run, was wrong.

must refrain from poking its nosa in.
But as fellow Americans, we can hope that the much-maligned spirit of nationalism—even including its prickly anti-United States manifestations—will prevail over separatism.

will prevail over separatism.

The reason is that the breakup of Canada would not create two strong nations, but two—and perhaps more—weak and quarrelsome bordering states, each inviting exploitation from abroad.

If Canada were to acquiesce in its own dismemberment, a modest proposal would be recalled that was put forward in the 1844 victory of James Polk—"Fifty-four forty, or fight." At that time, the United States angrily disputed British ownership of part of the Oregon territory leading up toward Alaska, to the longitude of 54-40.

President Polk, however, preferred to fight Mexico for the annexation of Texas than the British for the Canadian provioce now called British Columbia, which is why the northern border of the United States is the 49th parallel. We did not get to 54-40, nor did we fight.

But if Canada divides, would there not be pressure from above and below the 49th parallel to merge Canada's western provinces into a United States of North America, with our "Manifest Destiny" marching unvexed from Oregon to Alaska?

ESSAY

If separatism succeeds, would not a Sasketchewan Statebood Party press for admission to the United States, citing our common language, common democratic tradition, common western frontier culture, and—above all-territorial contiguity?

A Canada that tolerated the separaation of its largest province would start down the road of further subdivision, resolving regional differences by further Balkanization and—in some cases—affiliation with the United States.

We would be better off with one Canada. Canada would be better off with one Canada. The Canucks are not like the Kurds, a separate people decimated and dominated by oppressors; oor is Canada a New World Yugoslavia, five nations held together by the legend of an aging leader.

Canadians ought to stop pretending the separatist threat is not serious, and start making it clear that whatever autonomous and culture-respecting arrangements are made for the Québécois, they flow from the font of one diverse but unified oation.

Charles de Gaulle, with his Incitement to a "liberated" Quebec, was wrong. I only wish I could think of another occasion in which de Gaulle, in the loog run, was wrong.

Thailand and the U.S.

By David Morell and Susan Morell

PRINCETON, N.J.—In October 1973, an unprecedented spasm of popular animosity to military rule forced Tharland's generals to relinquish the political power they had held for most of the previous 40 years. In October 1976, they reclaimed it.

This is the most repressive military Government since the abolition of absolute monarchy in 1932. It is not a government of, by or for anyone but the generals and the upper 5 percent of the Thai population that stands to gain from a return to the status quo of the 1957-73 period—golden years for the military elite, when Thailand's position as a staunchly anti-Communist ally of the United States pulled in a fortune in military and economic aid.

In the wake of several thousand political errests, hundreds of university students and others on the military's list of those "potentially dangerous to society" have been fleeing Bangkok. Sizable numbers are going to the hills to join the insurgency, These are the same people who demonstrated against military dictatorship and for a constitution in 1973, thereby engendering the popular revolution. They were not Communists then, nor have they proposed a Communist govern-

We do not share the view that right-wing elements in nations like Thalland are unable to carry out political-power moves without the guidance and hand-holding of the Central Intelligence Agency. That military and police units are totally capable of designing and executing such events.

Yet it is true that C.I.A. involvement in Thailand has been a comprehensive effort, involving the same organizations that lent financial and organizations that lent financial and organizational support during 1975 and 1976 to such groups as the "Red Gauss." This vocational-student vigilante group repeatedly has been whapped to a fever pitch of resentment and hatred of "rich, Communistic university students."

It was the Red Gaurs, along with police units, who brutally attacked, killed and even burned alive Tharmasat University students when they demonstrated against the return of former Prime Minister, Field Marshal Thamom Kittikachorn. In the midst of this attack, the military intervened with a coup aimed at "re-establishing order and stability in the kingdom."

A critical factor in the Oct. 6 coup was the role of King Phumiphon Adulyadej, Rama IX. In lending his visible support to the forces of the right, he abandoned a tradition. Always, in the past, he remained officially deteched from "politics," thereby making it possible for all citizens to identify with him and, more important, to continue believing that deep in his whatever that side might be. The Thai nation is now forced to reckon with the King as an unmistakably overt political personage, marking a turning point that cannot be overestimated.

What did the United States do to support the fledgling democratic political process in Thailand as it limped through the troubled last three years? From the outset, the people's representatives were accused of lacking information on crucial issues, and of insufficient status to hold public office. There was a lot of truth to these accusations. They were denied important information oo domestic and foreignpolicy issues by military figures who continued, albeit from a low-profile stance, to enjoy contacts with highlevel United States and Thai leaders, and to receive privileged information on these issues. They were denied status by the King, who never lent royal legitimacy to the elected Parlia-

In 1974, when the United States spent $29 million in Thailand in military and economic aid, the new T50,000 in aid funds for a badly needed information system and library. Representatives had nothing even suggesting the kind of reference service our own Congress takes for granted, no staff analysts to educate them about critical domestic and foreign policy.

Serious proposals for modest kinds of American financial support for the parliamentary institution were continually rejected as "suggestive of intervention in Thai domestic politics," as if military and economic and had no such effect.

Why did we balk at giving even small sums of foreign and to support the kinds of institutions that might preempt the need for Communist-suppression operations?

It remains our national policy not to concede to Communist domination of independent nations. Yet we continue to concede to domination of independent nations by repressive military regimes that provide the ideal chimate for Communist insurgency. To combat the growth of these insurgent movements, we shower the ensuing chaos with military and economic aid—administered by military and police leaders. The effect is like that of spraying gasoline over smolderiog embers.

When will we have a foreign policy that revolves around the things we're for, ont against? We can let the world know, if we choose to do so, that benceforth we intend to use aid funds for support of representative government, political change through constitutional mechanisms, and civilian political competence sufficient to control military ambitions.

David Morell and Susan Morell have written extensively on Thailand.

Can a grille improve your mileage?

Everything that saves weight on a car helps to save fuel.

This grille, made of Lustran® ABS plastic by Monsanto, is a good example of how much weight can be saved in just a single place.

It weighs 4 pounds. The one it replaces weighs 28 pounds. You'd never guess it, because it looks just like metal. Lustran ABS can be given a bright mirror finish that doesn't crack or peel. And with a textured finish, it's the right material for interior kick panels, gearshift consoles and dashboard inserts.

To save even more weight, Monsanto makes Vydyne®R, a mineral reinforced nylon plastic that replaces heavy die-cast metal.

It adds up to significant fuel savings, when you consider the number of cars using these new materials. And it adds up to quite a demand.

We're doing all we can to meet it, by producing light weight by the ton at Monsanto

Policemen Who Commute Say That Jobs Demand Dedication but Not Habitation

By GEORGE VECSEY

The man was bleeding to death in gutter in South Jamaica, Queens. when the police car screeched to a halt. Kneeling in the blood, Officer David Goodman fashioned a tourniquet around the victim's thigh while Detective Angelo Librizzi checked for other wounds. A woman in the crowd drink-ing wine from a bottle in a paper sack said, "Do something, you police."

This was a typical Friday night in the 103d Precinct in Queens—a stab-bing over 50 cents in a card game being played on the hood of a car. On that same evening, the two squad car part-ners encountered family fights, flim-flam men, citizens left stunned by purse-snatchings and tense crowds at nearly every call.

When their tour was over after midnight, the partners left the city that has employed them for eight years and drove to the adjoining suburb of Nas-sau County. Somewhere along the quiet parkways, they slowly turned off the mental flashing red lights and the emotional whooping sirens of their occupation, gliding toward a world of silent subdivisions, patches of grass, small homes where their children slept and their wives waited for those reassuring

"If I'm working a dangerous job I know my wife is thinking about me," Detective Librizzi said. "I don't want to worry whether it's safe for her to go shopping or whether my kids are safe at school."

Image of 'Callous Caretaker'

Some city officials, residents and columnists think it is wrong that nearly half of the city's 26.190 policemen and nearly half of its 10,808 firemen live in the suburbs. To these critics, any policeman or fireman who lives outside the city has become a callous caretaker in a foreign town.

Most firemen and policemen who commute resent the suggestion that they have "deserted" the city or that they could be more dedicated than they

"We've lost 12 men in the past year," said Michael Maye, president of the Uniformed Firefighters Association. "Seven of them lived in the suburbs. Their dedication was not changed by

Every year there is talk of reviving the Lyons Law, which required all employees of the city to live within its boundaries. Mayor Beame and Police Commissioner Michael J. Codd have come out in favor of such a law for new employees. The old law was repealed in 1962, when the city realized its work force was spreading to the suburbs. This fall, State Senator Roy M. Goodman of Manhattan plans to prefile such a bill for the next legisla-

"When it comes to hiring new workers, we must first look to our own citizens," Senator Goodman said, citing the city's 10.1 percent unemployment rate and adding that surrounding counties have residency requirements or

Senator Goodman has been given hope by the Supreme Court decision last March that permitted Philadelhia to force firemen to move back into the city. Because of suburban votes in the State Legislature, there is little likelihood that Senator Goodman's bill will pass, nor are any police or fire jobs likely to become available soon. Still, policemen and firemen must face three major arguments about why they should live in the city.

Economic. City money should go to city residents, who will spend their income (and payroll tax) in the city.

Practical. Officers will be available for off-duty emergencies.

Psychological. An officer who lives in a "suburban" environment will not have as much identification with his job as a city resident.

All these arguments disturb Angelo Librizzi. From the time he was a baby, Detective Librizzi played on the beaches of the Rockaways. He 100k a football scholarship to the Citadel io-South Carolioa, played offensive and defensive end in a 27-0 victory over

Pupils Poor in Spanish Helped in Puerto Rico

SANTURCE, P. R. - Edward McKay Colon, who is 15 years old, was in the ninth grade at Brooklyn Technical High School when sudden family problems took him from his bome in Corona, Queens, back to the island of his mother's birth. He knew a little Spanish from home but was not really fluent in the language, and soon he felt lost in his new surroundings.

"They said the people in Puerto Rico spoke English, But that's not true," he would do it in English. But they didn't give me credit for it," she said, "I could hardly speak Spanish." She got an A in English but her other grades plummeted.

For Alida Soto, the experience was bitter: "I couldn't speak Spanish, so-the teachers didn't care," she said, adding that her move back to Puerto Rico involved "too long a story" to sell. But as a result of her language problem—she had first come to the island at age 14-she was left back twice in the eighth grade.

In recent years, the massive migration of Puerto Ricans to the mainland has been reversing itself, and in the last five years alone, more than 90.000 people have returned to the island. Many of them, like Edward Colon, Mary Ann Carrion and Alida Soto, are second or third generation Puerto Ricans with limited or nonexistent Spanish-speaking ability who often find academic and social problems as severe as those faced by earlier non-English-speaking pupils in New

2,000 in Experiment

Their unexpected arrival (there are an estimated 45,000 such persons in the 708,000-pupil Puerto Rican school system, compared with 50,000 students with poor English-language ability in 1.1 million pupils in New York) has forced the creation of bilingual education programs by a system that is already overtaxed because of overcrowding, poor physical facilities and too Edward, Mary Ann and Alida now attend the San Juan Bilingual School and are among just 2,000 students served by experimental programs throughout

"They are in the same situation I discovered in New York when I worked with students from here who had gone over there," said Norma Espinet, principal of the school, which has 360 pupils in the seventh to tenth grades and a waiting list of 300. Until 1973, she taught for five years in District 23 in Brooklyn.

While decrying the lack of funds, the principal said that "99 percent of the solution is human relations.

"The most important thing is for the student to feel that he is wanted." she said. "You must work hand in hand with the parents and you must educate the teacher to make sure he accepts the program and adapts himself to the

"The mainland-born youth is seen as a cultural aggressor," he said, noting a social aspect that further complicates the extension of instruction in English on the island.

Historically, the preservation of Spanish has been considered a key to the survival of what Dr. Seda called "the Puerto Rican nationality," and past attempts to impose English as the sole means of instruction ultimately were rebuffed. Today, Spanish is the instructional medium in Puerto Rican schools and English is taught as a reg-

AUDIT ASSAILS STATE OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE

An Albany Report Calls Record of Robbery Arrests Compared With Number of Crimes 'Discouraging'

By PETER KIHSS

A state report said yesterday that the criminal justice system had had a "discouraging" record statewide on robberies, with less than one-quarter as many arrests as reported robberies last year.

Even then there were less than onequarter as many convictions as arrests. The report by the Division of Criminal Justice Services said many more crimes were believed to occur than were reported to the police, and the comparisons ioclude arrests and convictions for crimes that occurred in previous years.

But the record, it said, showed 93,363 robberies made known to the police last year, while there were 23,908 arrests. The year saw 5,288 convictions for robbery and 3,293 sentences to state prisons for

2 Crimes a Minute

Statewide there were nearly two serious crimes every minute of the day last year, according to the first annual report by the division, headed by Commis-sioner Frank J. Rogers. The data were held to be the fullest ever collected on the state's crime, with 542 agencies representing 99.3 per cent of the population

The current criminal justice system "has failed to meet" goals of protecting rights of victims as well as lawbreakers; providing "swift, sure and humane punishment" for serious crimes, and prevent-ing state institutions from being "expensive breeding grounds of contempt which provide young offenders with advanced training in criminality and embitter older

Special to The New York Times

MERIDEN, Conn. — To Carter H.

White, the publisher of this city's principal newspapers, Mayor Abraham G. Grossman is a "tyrant' 'and a "buffooo," who drinks oo the job, holds secret meetings and perpetuates sinister "transgressions and illegalities" at Ciry Hall.

To Mayor Grossman; the publisher of The Morning Record and The Evening Journal is a "phony" influenced by the machinations, gyrations and disloyalties" of other politicians. As for the host of published accusations against him, the Mayor says: "Nuts!"

To aficionados of rapier wit, the debate may fall short of immortality.

But to many of Meriden's 60,000 residents, it has become a great home-town show — an old-fashioned, hare-knuckle political fight between two community leaders whose style, backgrounds and persuasions could hardly be more divergent.

The Publisher

Mr. White is a smooth, Harvard-educated Republican, the scion of a prosperous publishing family. He grew up in Meriden, calls everyone by his first name and takes a deliberate, analytical approach to problems.

Mayor Grossman is a pugnacious, Scripture-quoting infighter, a self-educated Democrat whose stocky figure, rolling jowls and volatile manners invite comparison with Fiorello H. La Guardia. He grew up amld poverty and anti-Semitism in New York City, won medals in World War II, became a successful shoe salesman-husinessman here and was known as a hlustery political gadfly before his election.

The publisher is 60 years old, and the Mayor will say only that he is not eligible for Social Security, but age is probably one of the few things the two men have in common.

The Mayor first won a two-year term in 1972, and made a comeback to take the $20,000-a-year post again last January. Since then, he and Mr. White have been glowering and growling at each other over a variety of

off. In a front-page editorial in The Record—one entitled The Last Straw— Mr. White celled for Mr. Grossman's resignation, accusing him of fraud in signing an application for Federal funds without consulting the City Council.

On the editorial page, there was more: A Bill of Particulars: The Citizens of Meriden vs. Mayor Abraham G. Grossman. It listed 27 "transgressions and illegalities," including allegations of overspending, underspending, unauthorized spending, illegal layoffs, secret contracts, secret meetings, repeated circumvention of the City. Council and interference in police and zoning matters.

"The City of Meriden finds itself in an almost impossible situation," Mr. White wrote, "We have elected a Mayor who has turned out to be a fraud upon the electorate. A. G. What I did, I did for the City of Meriden.

to hang out for students." Jason Riemer, a sophomore from Woodmere, was a littler harsher, per-haps hecause he had been stopped and his car had been searched by the police in Stony Brook for no reason at all,

"If anyone tried to open up a place for students around here," he said, "there would be opposition to it. The town wouldn't let it happen."

Now the univarsity is approaching the completion of the final phase of its growth, and its officials know that tha struggle for acceptance is not over. Next month, its new, Health Sciences Center will be dedicated across Nicolls Road from the main campus, A complex that will eventually include a 540bed hospital, tha medical research and treatment centar will eventually in volve 5,000 students, teachers and staff members, and its lumpy, modernistic towar dominates tha rolling North Shore countryside for milas around.

"It looks like ice cubes in a glass" was the most printable comment from one critic, and the tower has become tha strongast visual symbol of the university's presence in the community. Relations Reaching Critical Stage

The univarsity's relations with its naighbors are also reaching a critical point because of the great concarn among Long Islanders these days about sewaga. The university's sewer line to the outdated and overstrained treatment plant at Port Jefferson ruptured recently, pouring enough effluent into Setauket Harbor to close the waters there to shallfishing and renewing the call from local papers and some com-munity leaders for the university to hulld its own sewage traatment plant.

Then there is the problem of bousing. "Tha state, in all its wisdom, dacided to plunk a major university in the middle of a suburban community with no concern for where the people were going to live." Marcia Grann Schwen, co-editor and publisher of the fladgling Village Times weekly and on balance a friend of the university, said.

The need for affordabla housing has pushed tha university into the almost forbidden ground of urging construc-tion of apartments nearby, in the face of an almost universal suburban horror of such housing reflected in strict singla-dwelliog zoning laws.

So far, the surrounding towns have absorbed the faculty and the illegal, but tolerated, "grouper residences" of rent-sharing studants in axisting buildings. But with the stata's having frozen funds for construction of new campus living space, Mr. Woods, of the university, concedes that the lack of housing "is going to become a critical problem very soon."

Further, the university's relations with the public are critical in a way that similar relations between other towns and older, private colleges are.

This is because Stony Brook, as a public institution, is extremely seositive to political currents, especially at a time of fiscal stress in the state when every dollar for one campus represents a dollar taken from one of tha other State University campuses. Because of its newness, university officials privately concede, Stony Brook has not yet huilt up tha kind of political hase in its community that the university centers at Buffalo and Albany, outgrowths of existing urban collages,

In the scrambla for education dollars each year in the State Legislature, the two upstate campuses have consistently outmanauvered Stony Brook with the help of legislators for whom support of the local campus is a political asset, not-as it at least once was-a liability. (Stony Brook, incidentally, has an annual operating hudget of $100 million a year.)

But the situation is changing now, Dr. John Toll, Stony Brook's president.

"We understand the concerns of tha people in the area," Dr. Toll said re-"We agree that it is sensible to protect the area. It's one of the principal magnets for our feculty-they like to live here, and we want to keep it that way."

Dr. Toll, a theoretical physicist wbosa grasp of the realities in the politics of education is anything but theoretical, has spent his 12 years as bead of Stony Brook developing his plan for tha university to become the focus of a "talent industry" on Long Island. The idea would be to provide the metropoli-tan area with the research and exper-tise needed for solutions to social and technological problems.

And although soma residents com-plain about an "alitist" and aloof atti-tude among people from the university community, the infusion of residents with more specialized tastes has con-tributed in large measure to a flower-ing of little specialty shops and boutiques in tha area.

"You have to be a little more aducated to appreciate things like this," Ellan Galbraith said, indicating the clutter of imported cheesas, rare coffees and teas, unusual spices and European cooking otensils in her Gourmet Living store on Port Jefferson's main street. The university people are very knowledgeable and very fussy, they know what they want, and that makes it much more interesting for us."

Walter Chrusch, who has run tha Country Deli in Stony Brook for 10 years, is even more outspokan in his affection for the Stony Brook students ha sarves aach day.

"Tha people around here, thay're so raunchy they'd be against any change. especially from tha south side of the tracks," he said, "I call tham the livar-wurst millionaires. A 22-foot-tall, 30-foot-long bug with a red head, vellow eyes, aars, tongue and legs (six) and a blue and green body went for a walk in Central Park yesterday to the delight of several hundred spectators.

Parade officials took advantage of yesterday's crisp fall weather to hold a short rehearsal for the giant bug and tha II clowns that will accompany it.

And with all the cyclists, strollers, horsa-drawn cabs and low-hanging branches it had to manauver around, the bug probably had a roughar time yesterday than it will in the parade.

"Watch out for tha branches," shouted Nancy Williams, a Macy's employea who works on the parada staff. But her warning cama too late for Jeff Blumenthal, who rode on a special seat on top of tha bug. Swinging branches got him a few times, but nothing seri-

UConn Defeats Brown, 1-0, In Soccer Regional Final

Connecticut defealed Brown, 1-0, before 9,500 fans at Storrs, Conn., yesterday for its second New England regional soccer title in three years. Bob Derrico scored with 30 minutes left to give the Huskies the right to meet Hartwick, the New York champion, for a berth in the National Collegiate Athletic Association semifinals.

In other regional finals yesterday, Clemson defeated Howard, 3-1, before more than 4,000 fans at Clemson, and Philadelphia Textile sent Temple to its first loss of the season, 4-0.

The Midwest regionals were also played yesterday, with Indiana and Southern Illinois-Edwardsville scoring respective 2-1 victories over Akron and St. Louis. Harry Keough, the St. Louis coach, said: "We didn't want the match as much as they did. We went ahead but then we kind of folded."

Connecticut controlled the game in the first half, but Coach Joe Morrone's team was unable to finish its efforts. The Huskies also killed the last five minutes by controlling the ball in ona of the corners they flooded with

Scottish Deerhound Named Best At 50th Springfield K.C. Show

By WALTER R. FLETCHER

WEST SPRINGFIELD, Mass., Nov. 21 - The royal dog of Scotland was crowned best today at the 50th finture staged by the Springfield Kennel Club on the Eastern States Exposition Grounds. He was Ch. Salutary's Alfred, a Scottish deerhound owned by Mrs. Gayle Bontecou of Clinton Cornars, N.Y., and Janelle Rosen, a breeder from Alliance, Ohio.

It was a historic occasion for a historic show. "This is the largest entry Springfield has had since our predescessor, the Rod and Gun Club, staged its first dog show in 1874," said Dr. Tom Davies, the president, "It's also the first time we have held an event in the winter. Almost all of the dogs were sbown by their owners, for we had only a handful of professionals, and there were major points in 63 breeds."

It also was birthday celebration time at Springfield. Elliott Weiss, who handied Chubby, as the gray deerhound is called, was 34 years old today and the winner was 3 years old, just six days ago.

For Chubby, it was the third time he has earned the silverware. His first victory came at North Country, in Watertown, N.Y., late in September and this was followed the next weekend at James River In Virginia. On the way to the final, the deerhound gained his 17th blue rosette.

"It's the first time I've ever seen him," said Mrs. Mary Brewster, who gave the deerhound the award. "I was particularly impressed by the way ne moved." Bob Tongren, who had Chubby in the group, added, "He has the real deerhound temperament and is absolutely sound." In winning, the deerhound defeated Joan Fisher's buildog, Ch. Show Biz Fairy Prince, from Redding, Conn., who has been best in show three times in Canada, including the big Montreal event last spring. He also had five tri-umphs in this country. The brindle and white has won 42 groups.

Judy Colan's Weimaraner, Ch. Colsidex Standing Ovation, who makes a habit of winning specialities, with IU to his credit, received a rousing ova-tion when he was named best sporting dog for the fourth time.

Lieut. Col. William Garvey's and Sherman Katz's Old English sheepdog. Ch. Barrelrolt Blues in the Night, rolled to his 18th blue rosette. The bobtail was haodled by Garvey, who retired from the Air Force seven years ago after having flown missions in Italy in World War II, Korea and served as a

Rutgers Lacks Bowl Invitation Despite Perfect Reco

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.

Colgate had its finest and possibly its most disappointing football season in 1932, when Coach Andy Kerr's Red Raiders beat all nine opponents without giving up a single poiot. When the Rose and Orange Bowls, the only postseason games in existence then, ignored the Hamilton, N.Y., school, that Colgate team earned one of the most famous descriptions in college sports-"undefeated, untied, unscored upon and uninvited."

When Colgate plays Rutgers at Giants Stadium Thursday night, some retired Colgate alumni might explain to young Rutgers students and alumni just how to live with such a disappointment, Rutgers, undefeated, untied and with the nation's best defense against scoring, may not be going to a bowl game even though there are now a dozen of these postseason contests.

The four major bowls-Rose, Cotton, Sugar and Orange-quickly lined up their teams late Saturday afternoon. and then, one by one, six of the eight smaller bowl games filled their cards. Rutgers's only remaining chance for a bowl bid last night was a call from the new Independence Bowl, scheduled for Shreveport, La., a Mooday night. Dec. 13. McNeese State, of Lake Charles, La., is the champion of the Southland Conference and therefore automatically goes to the Independence Bowl, which has a 10-year contract for the champion of the league.

Rutgers is carrying major-college football's loogest winning streak, which the Scarlet Knights hope to extend to 18 in the regular-season finale against once-beaten Colgate, But this didn't mean a thing to bowl selection committees, which once again opted. by and large, for conference teams from the Southern tier.

Three Major Independents Selected Only three major independent team's were selected, and two of them, Penn State and Notre Dame, will meet in the Gator Bowl, The other independent is Pittsburgh, the undefeated team that is ranked No. 1 in the nation and recognized by bowl people as worthy. The Panchers picked the Sugar Bowl, in which they will play Georgia on Jan. 1 in the New Orleans Superdome.

Rutgers had expected at least a chance at either the Peach or the Tangerine bowls. But North Csrolina and Kentucky got the Dec. 31 Peach game, at Atlanta, and Oklahoma State and Brigham Young were asked to the Tangerine, in Orlando, Fla., Dec. 18. This will mark Kentucky's first bowl since 1952, when Coach Paul (Bear) Bryant took the Wildcats to the Cotton Bowl and beat Texas Christian, 20-7.

Bryant, of course, is still going to bowl games with his Alabama Crimson Tide, which accepted a bid to play the University of California, Los Angeles, in the Liberty Bowl in Memphis Dec. 20. This is the 18th bowl game for Alabama in the 19 years Bryant has been the Tide's head football coach-

Astro Bluebonnet Not Set

The Astro Bluabonnet Bowl, in Houston's Astrodome Dec. 31, was the only bowl other than the independence that had not filled its field last night. John M. Mattenheimer, president of that bowl, sald yesterday that he boped for Texas Tech against Nebraska. But Tech still has an outside chance at the Cotton Bowl, and Nebraska can go to the Orange Bowl if it beats Oklahoma Friday. If Oklahoma wins, Colorado will go to the Orange Bowl and the Cornhuskers to the Astro Bluebonnet. Mattenheimer said that Rutgers was not being considered by his game's Danny Davis, Houston quarterback, led his Cougars to a 27-19 victory over Texas Tech on Saturday, Tech's first loss of the seasoo. This put Houston on top in the Southwest Athletic Con-ference, and if the Cougars beat Rice this week they will get the Cotton Bowl spot against Maryland, one of three major undefeated and untied teams. Pitt and Rutgers are the others.

U.S.C., Michigan in Rose Bowl

Southern California and Michigan played their way into the Rose Bowl by beating U.C.L.A. and Ohio State, respectively, Saturday. The losers took consolation bowl bids, as Obio State was picked for the Orange Bowl and then U.C.L.A. for the Liberty. Orange Bowl officials said they had selected the Big Ten runner-up because Ohio State had more alumni in Florida than U.C.L.A. It was just a case of econom-

The members of the Big Ten, who share in all bowl games their teams play in, will cut up nearly $2.3 million from Rose and Orange Bowl receipts this year.

Joe Paterno, Penn State's coach, said he was "very pleased" to be playing Notre Dame in the Gator Bowl. Palerno did another of his excellent coaching jobs this season by turning a 1-3 team after four games into a team with a six-game winning streak at present. He has wanted to take one of his Penn State teams against Notre Dame for years. He finally managed to get the Irish and the Nittany Lions together for a 10-year home-and-home series starting in 1981. To Paterno, this Gator Bowl affair will be an enjoyable chal-

"It's a natural rivalry," Paterno said. "It's as natural as the rivalry between Penn State and Ohio State." The Lions have two more games with Ohio State in a four-year series.

Block of Extra Point Sinks Giants, 14-13; 5 Namath Passes Intercepted in 38-24 Loss

Iets' Todd Also Victim-Twice-of Patriots

By GERALD ESKENAZI "We killed them!"

Strange words from Ed Galigher, the defensive tackle, whose team, the Jets, lost by 38-24 yesterday to the New England Patriots. That's what eats me up." Galigher added. "I'd like to see the statistics." The statistics will show that, indeed, the New Yorkers outgained the visitors

But Joe Namath, who insisted "I was throwing to the right places," threw five interceptions. Two were picked off for long tnuchdown returns by Prentice McCray. Another touchdown was positioned by a Namath fumble. In fact, every New England score-five touchdowns and a field goal-resulted from turnovers.

So those statistics that will eat Galigher up also show that the playoffbound Pats had only one drive from scrimmage as lnng as 42 yards. They bad only 237 yards of offense compared with the Jets's 287.

But they didn't have seven passes intercepted or lose three furnhles. Namath's performance was another that will fuel the anti-Namath, pro-Na-

There will be a picture frazen in the memory of the 49,953 fans at Shea Stadium: Namath throwing long, and his receivers having to slow down for the ball, going back to it, hoping the defensive back doesn't get there first.

"The passes weren't as crisp as he usually throws them," said McCray, who became the 11th player in National Football League history to return two interceptions for scores.

"Before the game, I said to myself,
'I want two today," said McCray.
His first came in the second quarter when he cut in front of Rich Caster and ran all the way hume, 63 yards, while Namath hobbled after him for about 10 yards and then stopped when it was apparent McCray was gone. Then in the third quarter another sideline pass for Caster wound up in McCray's hands, and this was good for 'They weren't crummy thraws," said Namath later. "It wasn't like I was

Danelo Is Stymied by Broncos After 2d-Period Score By MICHAEL KATZ

DENVER, Nov. 21—It has been that kind of season for the Giants. After 5 hours 11 mioutes 50 seconds of playing time, dating back to Oct. 17, they finally scored a touchdown today. So Phil Olsen, the 28-year-old younger brother of Merlin Olsen of the Los Angeles Rams, blocked Joe Danelo's first extra-point attempt in five games, and the Giants lost for the 10th time in 11 National Football League cootests this season, by 14-13 to the Denver Broncos at Mile High Stadium.

Brad Van Pelt blocked a Billy Van Heusen punt, and Jim Stienke of the Giants fell oo the hall at the Denver 1 and rolled over ioto the eod zone with his team's first 6-pointer since 2 minutes 45 seconds of the second period at Minnesota on Oct. 17. The touchdown came with 25 seconds remaining in the first half, cut Denver's lead to 14-5 and wakened the Giants long enough for the offense to get its first touchdown, on a '-yard dive hy Lary Csunka oo fourth down midway through the third quarter.

The Giant defeose, whose streak of holding the opposition to no touchdowns was ended at 10 quarters the first time Denver had the oall, held the Broocos to a total of 83 yards in the second half. But, after Csonka's touchdown, the offense could never get within field-goal range for Danelo, who kicked four 3-pointers last week in the Giants' lone victory of the

One Last Chance

Craig Morton, sidelined hy an in-jured elbow last week, while Norm Snead was the quarterback in the 12-9 triumph over the Washingtoo Redskins, had one last chance with 18 seconds remaining in the game. The Giants took over on their 33 hut had no timeouts remaining, and Morton, whose elbow had been slightly reinjured earlier in the fourth quarter, threw as far as he could. Steve Fuley, Denver's fifth defensive hack, made his second inter-ception of the game, at the Bronco 22. He returned it 23 yards, lateraled to Raody Gradishar, who ran 10 more yards and lateraled in Louis Wright, who was finally brought down at the Giant 13 with oo time remaining.

"I'll have to speak to them about that tomorrow," said Coach John Ral-ston of the Broncos, who did not like the risks his team had taken with its playoff chances.

The Broncos, who were eliminated from the title race in the American Conference's Western Divisioo by Oakland's victory earlier in the day, gained their seventh victory in 11 games and maintained their chances for a wildcard playoff berth.

The Broncos had been favored by 10 points, but if it hadn't been for the blocked extra point "we'd still be out there playing." said John McVay, the disappointed Giant coach.

Danelo, who had been short and wide with a 53-yard field-goal attempt in the first half, had to delay his extrapoint kick a split second while Larry Mallory, the holder, fielded a high snap from Ralph Hill, the center.

Rams Defeat 49ers and Close In on Title

By LEONARD KOPPETT Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 21-The weather was beautiful in Candlestick Park today, but if the 23-3 victory the Los Angeles Rams scored over the San Francisco 49ers had been played in driving rain and a sea of mud, it would have been exactly the sort of foothall game people blame on the weather.

Neither offense could do anything, and when the Rams broke it open with 17 points in a five-minute stretch of the third quarter, they scored off two fumbles and an interception. The 49ers wound up using three quarterbacks, all

As a result, the Rams closed in on a fourth straight Western Division title under Coach Chuck Knox, and the 49ers had their enthusiastic "rehuilding year" under Coach Moote Clark collapse about them to the tune of hooing from a capacity crowd of 61,000. In addition, Cedric Hardman, their outstanding defensive end, suffered a hroken ankle. The Rams now have a won-lost-tied record of 7-3-1 with three games left -- against New Orleans and Atlanta at home, and at Detroit. The 49ers, still second in this division of the National Conference, are 6-5 with Minnesota at home and visits to San Diego and New Orleans coming up. The team that finishes first, of course, will enter the playoffs, but the 49ers have no hope of making it even as a wild-card team.

Guess What's Happening to Baseball

every day has brought fresh evidence of how little the men who own basehall know about their own husiness. Throughout this century, and even earlier, owners have insisted and perhaps believed that if players were allowed a voice in their own future it would be the end of the game "as we know it." They have belabored the point with such doomful persistence that the general public, most players, a large segment of the press, many members of Coogress and even the

Sports The Times

Supreme Court of the United States accepted their prophecies as revealed truths. Through the agency of Andy Messersmith, Dave McNally, Peter Seitz and two Federal courts, these arguments are being tested for the first time. Up to now, no single one of them has proved valid. There is excellent reason to believe that the men who own baseball have been talking through their hats all along.

They said that if the standard contract did not bind the player to his employer from cradle to grave, players would be gypsying across the map in greedy pursuit of the top dollar. They said this would destroy "fan identification" with members of the home team.

In the first test of that prediction, 24 of the 600 players in the major leagues chose to work out their contracts and shop around for a job. In the same period—that is, from the end of the 1975 season to the 1976 World Series well over 100 and perhaps as many as 200 changed teams involuntarily. The men who worry about "fan Identification" sold or traded away something near one-third of all the players in the majors. Lonesome Charley

It was predicted that if players were free to change jobs like workers in any other industry, all the stars would be snapped up by the richest—and therefore greediest clubs, or they would gravitate to the glamour cities like New York and Los Angeies, or they would join the strongest clubs with the brightest prospects.

Of the first 10 players to pick a new employer, New York got one and Los Angeles none. The others chose to play io Milwaukee, Claveland, Atlanta, Montreal, Anaheim, Calif., Arlington. Texas, San Diego and Boston. In every case, the player picked a team with a poorer woo-lost record, and presumably dimmer prospects, than the team he left. On second though, that reference to pennant prospects may not be accurate. Six players quit Charley Finley, and the way things are going, nobody's chances look dimmer than Oakland's.

Over the decades, the single excuse used for allowing employers outright ownership of their employees was that it preserved "competitive balance." Since there was only one winner to a league, almost all of those who spoke so earnestly about preserving competitive balance were losers. 18 was always entertaining to hear somebody like Montreal's Johnny McHale hold forth in this vein, because fans won't forcet it right away.

Seventeen shopping days have passed since the market opened on baseball's new breed of freedmen, and almost that has existed since Montreal got into the league, it would

Contrary to all forbodiog, it looks as though the move-ment of free agents will do more to achieve competitive halance than the reserve system ever did. The weaker teams that are serious about trying to improve have gone after the available talent earnestly. Milwaukee, California. Cleveland, Montreal and Texas have all helped themselves, and there is time to do more.

Take Back Your Gold

It will surprise some that when a player decides which offer to accept, money is not necessarily the compelling factor, When Gary Matthews chose Atlanta and Sal Bando went to Milwaukee, they said they had rejected higher offers from other clubs. Not every ballplayer lusts after gold alone. As Jerry Kapstein, the agent, said when Don Gullett picked the Yankees, such considerations as a team's tradition, the environment and the way a team handles its pitchers can all influence the decision.

At the same there can be reasons other than money why a player might want to get away from a team. Maybe the owner addresses him as "Boy" or refers to him as "the village idiot."

There oever was any reason why long-term contracts could not accomplish everything the reserve system was supposed to do. Multiyear contracts protect fan identification, preserve competitive balance and assure the owner a fair return on his investment in player development.

Although long-term contracts are feasibly, legal and equitable, they are unpopular with haseball employers. They prefer one-year agreements so they can cut the player's salary after a poor season, fire him when they choose and, if he is disabled by injury, get rid of him as quickly and cheaply as possible. Given a choice, they will unselfishly cede all risks to the player. Also, long-term contracts make them nervous because they lack faith in their ability to assess talent and fear getting stuck with a turkey.

Nevertheless, changing circumstances are forcing them to employ multiyear agreements in self-defense. Free agents like Don Gullet, Gary Matthews, Joe Rud: and others who accepted package deals running into the millions have all committed themselves for a considerable piece of the future. And other clubs have done so with 18 of their men, Don Suttoo has just signed for four years with the Dodgers, Ken Holtzman is on a five-year contract with the Yankees,

Owners of losing teams used to feel it important to make winter deals to convince the clientele that they were serious about strengthening the club. From a public relations point of view, an aggressive attitude toward free agents may be even more important. If teams like Baltimore, Minnesota, the Cubs. Houston and the Mets come up empty, their Food Old Faithful. Always got you where you ⇒ going. Always did it economically. A whole eration of Americans grew up with Old Faith-And now, 27 years and 33 million cars later, it's a symbol of dependability and economy.

low there's a car that's just as reliable and lomical as Old Faithful ever was. It's New Faith-The 1977 VW Rabbit. With engineering so aded that automotive experts have hailed it as aind of car Detroit will be building in the 1980's. he Rabbit has a new fuel injection system, so it s up quick as a bunny. Springs like one, too. 0 to 50 in just 7.7 seconds.* The Rabbit also has advanced engineering features like negative steering roll radius to help maintain directional stability in the event of a front-tire blowout; rack-and-pinion steering for more direct maneuvering and better road feel; and an independent stabilizer rear axle, low in unsprung weight, for better road holding.

New Faithful lives up to Old Faithful's reputation for economy, too. Because it has fuel injection, you can use the most economical grade of gas.* But you won't have to use it very often. Rabbit gets 37 mpg on the highway, 24 in the city. (That's EPA's estimate for manual transmission. Actual mileage may vary, depending on driving habits, car's condition and optional equipment.)

Dependability and economy. That's what Old Faithful gave a whole generation of Americans. And that's what New Faithful is giving a whole new generation of Americans.

Jets Beaten as Namath Throws 5 Interceptions

year Namath threw six interceptions against Baltimore.

Yet, in the opeoing quarter, after Namath made what is becoming his week-·ly debut following a starting role by Todd, he threw the bail hard. A toss to Caster, in fact, who was 60 yards downfield, was dropped. There was nothing fluttery about the ball.

And Jerome Barkum, who played for the first time this season, and snared an Il-yard touchdown pass with that magnificent reach, weot to Namath's defensa, too.

"When you think your throws to every receiver bave to be programmed differently, that he haso't thrown to me for a year, well, be was just passing as well as ever."

But not always to his teammates. although they often dropped the ball when he did bit them. He completed 16 of his 35 attempts for 176 yards. He was sacked three times and he was intercepted at key times, wheo the Jets might very well have gone on to defeat a Patriot team that inflicted a 41-7 defeat oo them last month.

With the Jets trailing by 14-10 early in the second quarter, Namath was intercepted in the end zone after the Jets had got to the Pats' 18. Later in the quarter, after moving to the Pats' 48, McCray picked off his first score. In the third quarter, on the opening drive with the Jets trailing by 21-17, Namath was intercepted in the end zone again after the New Yorkers had reached the 11-yard line. And on the next drive, McCray ran hack another one.

That was why Coach Lou Holtz, who complained about stomach pains, also said, "The Jets beat somehody today as decisively as they ever heat anyone before—they heat themselves."

Outstanding work by the Jet defense -the Pats bad averaged 4.9 yards a run-contained New England runoers to an average of 3.8 yards a carry. Steve Grogan, who had averaged 8 yards a carry from his quarterback slot, was held to minus-2 yards on two runs.

Greg Buttle, the fine rookie linebacker, picked off one Grogan throw and also recovered a fumble, as did John Ebersole. Buttle ran for a touchdown on his recovery. Every Jet score, until the final ooe, also resulted from a

But they couldn't offset the three interceptions by Mike Haynes, or even keep the early 10-0 Jets' edge.

The Patriots actually were outplayed when it came to moving the ball from scrimmage. They were unable to cope with Clark Gaines, the rookie all-purpose back who caught seveo passes for 32 yards. Gaines also had a 54-yard rushing day, his lowest in his five straight starting assignments.

But New England played without Sam Cunningham. Still, they got a 109-yard rushiog performance from Don Cal-

They got their final interceptioo after Todd was in the game io the final minutes. Earlier, Todd had passed to Gaioes for a 26-yard touchdown play. Theo the Jets recovered the ball on an ooside kickoff in which nine New Yorkers were positioned to the right of the kicker, Pat Leahy, who kicked the ball to the right.

It was too late anyway. The turn-overs had takeo care of the result, de-moralizing the Jets' defeose. "We could just not believe," said Burgess Owens, "what was going on

The Redskins had 56 rushing plays, 16 over the N.F.L. game average, and therefore they controlled the game. timing." Danelo said of the Giants' kicking team. "I felt like I got erough height on it. I suppose I could've gone right through and kicked it, but I didn't kno wwhere the hall was going to be. A half-second, that's all it takes."

Hill said be had bad higher snaps converted, and Mallory said the ball had not been especially high. But the Broncos apparently had spotted a weakness in the Giants' blocking. Olsen went over John Hicks's spot at right guard to get his band on the ball.

The Giants were surprised by what Denver was doing offensively early in the game.

"They did exactly the opposite of what the scouting reports said they would," said Stienke, the right corner-back. "According to the reports, they were supposed o pass out of some formations, run out of others. They did just the opposite."

Moses and Odoms Score

Whatever the case, after Rick Upchurch had returned the opening kick-off 42 yards to the Denver 44, the Broncos moved 56 yards for the first touchdown against the Giants since the second period of the game against the Philadelphia Eagles on Oct. 31. It came on a 4-yard pass from Steve Ramsey to Haven Moses. Stienke was beaten on the play.

Ramsey threw another 4-yard scoring pass in the second quarter, this one to Riley Odoms, the tight end. The score was 14-0, Broncos.

But late in the half, with two of the nine penalties incurred by the Broocos pushing Denver deep into its territory, McVay called a timeout before a thirddown-and-10 play from the Bronco 13. There were still 32 seconds remaining after an 8-yard gain had brought up a fourth down and 2 from the 21. McVay ordered a 10-mao rush.

Van Pelt, who played a fine game at strong-side linebacker, got a hand on the ball, then lost sight of it. Stienke saw it. "I knew it was a touchdown," he said.

The Giants' first touchdown in more than a most housed them.

than a month buoyed them for the second half. Otis Armstrong, who had gained 79 yards rushing in the first balf, finished with only 97. Csonka, who had gained only 6 yards on five who had gained only 6 yards on five carries before intermission, finished with 47. And Bob Tucker the tight end who had oot caught a pass in three games, made two key receptions as the Giant offense, on four running plays from the Bronco 4, got its first touchdown sioce Doug Kotar's 3-yard support in Minnersta. sweep in Minnesota.

But after this 84-yard drive, which had started with a recovered fumble, the Giants made only one first down the rest of the game.

Maybe it was the atmosphere in Mile High Stadium. Maybe they were just tired. But the Giants rolled up an injury list. Jack Gregory, the defensive captain, damaged ligaments to bis right knee and may be out the rest of the season. Tests will be taken tomorrow. Five other players were listed as "questionable" for next week's game against the Seattle Seahawks at Giants Stadium. They are Hicks (who reinjured his left knee), Pat Hughes (groin), Kotar (pinched oerve in his neck), Ray Rhodes (groin) and Harry Carsoo (knee and rib cartilage).

Tennessee Tech in the Tangerine Bowl, served as an Army officer and then

Home was New York City. He was working for a Wall Street firm, study-ing law at oight, chasing stock swindlers during the day and making friends with city detectives he met. One day a friend banded him an application to the force and "ordered" bim to fill

"It was the best thing I ever did," Detective Librizzi said. "Everybody's always talking about getting involved, belping New York. I have this city. In my job, sometimes the good guys wio."

Angelo and Peggy Librizzi settled in the Rnckaways, but were disturbed as the city razed whole neighborhoods, steered welfare clients into aging homes and built large projects in the Rockaways. They could not afford the only oeighborboods they liked in Queens. They didn't desert the city, in their view, the city deserted them.

"Hey, my parents still live in the Rockaways," Detective Librizzi said. "I visit them every week. If I still lived there, I could take a bus or a subway to work. I wouldn't need a secood car, like we do in the suburbs."

Second Job Was Needed

Eight years ago, just as he joined the police force, Detective Librizzi squeezed out the down payment on a "handyman'a special" in North Massapequa. To pay for the repairs, he took a second job in a service sta-

"As a rookie, I wasn't supposed to moonlight," he recalled. "But I'd change oil and fix flats from 8 A.M. to 4 P.M., come home and eat supper, then work the 6 P.M.-to-2 A.M. shift

Today, that home is a gleaming tribute to the Librizzi family's handiwork. The back yard is tiny, surrounded by other small development homes, but Detective Librizzi has found room for a modest above-ground swimming pool for his two adopted children, Donna

Marie and Michael. "I know how that's going to sound to the paper," Detective Librizzi said cautiously. "But, look, I moonlighted four months for that pool. I take home $12,000 a year after taxes and $1,800 goes for town and school taxes."

He is involved in youth football and coaches a team of 10-year-olds. The Librizzis send their children to parochial achool in Nassau County.

A Tour of South Jamaica

The reasons for living in the suburbs are much the same for Detective Librizzi's partner, David Goodman, a native of Essex, England, who married a woman from Queens, became a Unit-ed States citizen and joined the force eight years ago. The nearest home to the city that they could afford on his salary (his takehome pay is now in the suburbs had not affected the way they worked. They took a visitor on their night shift last week, roaming into South Jamaica, a mostly black

You don't think about color in this job," Detective Librizzi said. "The people come down on black cops just es hard as on us. There's good and bad everywhere. You see some black woman get ripped off by some kids at the bus stop, and it's the same as if she were white. It bothers you."

Oo their working tour, the two partners helped a woman evict a male ners helped a woman evict a male friend, telling the woman to stop insulting him, telling the man to "be cool, man." 'They found a missing 15-year-nld girl hiding in an apartment, afraid to return to her shouting stepfather. They made the judgment that the girl was being harbured by "decent, religious people," and they warned the stepfather to leave the girl alone until a social worker could place her elsewbere.

'Different Scale of Values'

But the biggest job of the night was the stabbing on Merrick Boulevard. The officers scrambled to save the man's life, and it troubled them that nobody in the cruwd would offer any evidence. (The man later died, and two men were held in connection with his death.)

"It bothers you, at first, to think he died," Officer Goodman said. "Ynu dn all you cao at the scene, but once he gets to the hospital you try not to get involved. It's a different scale of values. Imagine dying fur 50 cents. But wheo we rescue a child, we find ourselves going back to the huspital every 15 minutes for the news."

Many policemen even make the argument that it is not good policy to force men to work in the same neighburhood where they live, because they might be too timid, or too zealous, and there could be repercussions. Others argue that a residency law would restrict their "civil rights" to live where they

"Some of my best men live in the city, and some live in the suburbs," said Capt. Charles Reuther, the chief nf the 103d Precinct. "It's the same way with my lower-rated men. I hate travel, and I live in a condominium 15 minutes away, but if I got married and wanted to chaoge my life style. I wouldn't want my freedom restricted. It doesn't make a bit of difference where a man lives." In a reverse way, however, it does matter greatly to David Goodman and Angelo Librizzi. It means that they can wade into a crowd, help a fellow offi-cer, settle a dispute and chase a burglar and know that, somewhere, the world is calm, that the people they love are

"But you know something?" Angelo Librizzi said. 'I really like where I live, but after eight years I still feel like a refugee. I feel transplanted out there. We're landlocked in Massapequa. I think of that beach in the Rockaways, and I feel sorry I can't live there any-

n that part of Massachusetts where I was raised there were a good many members of The Society of Mayflower Descend-(framed documents hung in their halls), but the fact that my family had made the voyage a few years later and for more worldly purposes was never held against us and we were always allowed to play touch football with the Winslows and the Bradfords on the morning of the great feast.

Of all the days in the calendar no one dislodges for me so murky and rich a beadcheese of familial, athletic, gustatory and spiritual experience as the day of Thanksgiving.

The panorama is so heady that one needs the turkey for a catalyst—that chain of birds that reaches way beyond the clear fields of memory into my nearly forgotten youth. One can decipher modern history in this long string of fowl.

ew York is filled with people who lives are so busy that it is entirely possible that there someone around who has invited a dozen people to diner on Thursday and had time to do nothing more than plan to huy a turkey.

New York also happens to be a city that can make life a pleasure for such people-the kind who always end up doing everything at the last minute. So, if they'll take care of the turkey, here are some suggestions for making other last-minute preparations:

What about a table, table linens, silverware, dishes and platters? If you'll provide the turkey and a bare room, Service Party-Rental, at 1032 Lexington, between 73d and 74th Streets; says it will do the rest. # The Fine Art of Buying Fine Art mewhere in the development of every marriage there is a moment of danger. It is prefaced by a question which, though brief, is a real killer. "Why on earth," say's spouse to spouse, "must we have that thing on the wall?"

By JOHN RUSSELL

Often this bappens quite early on, and at a time when life is supposed to have begun all over again—new mate, new nest, new everything—and even the slightest falling-out comes as a terrible blow. Our walls at that time are an extension of our joint selves. We are what we look at: What we look

Any imperfection in our walls, any failure of harmony, is seen in a larger context. If our walls are wrong, what else is wrong? What will our friends, neighbors and relations think? What will happen when the Chairman and his wife come by? Those walls will have a tale to tell, and one that makes ngly hearing.

lt's nonsense, of course. What we have on our walls is our own damn business. But in any shared life, art is a volatile and a subversive element. If something is wrong with a relation-ship, art will find it out. There is something instinctual and irreversible about the words "I cannot love someone who loves that picture."

So we are right to think about what's on our walls, and within limits we are right to give young people the

"Within limits," though. Young peo-ple must do things their own way. Buying art is not a matter of investment, or of following first principles, or of acquiring status and security. We buy art to find out who we are. Somewhere among the millions of images that the world has spawned in the last 500 years there is one that speaks to us directly. It is our guide, our counselor, our double and our friend. It's waiting for us. But how are we to find it?

Money belps? Yes, but money can also smother our individuality. In this matter, commitment counts for quite as much as a checkbook. If we can afford a Courbet still life and 27 drawings by Rembrandt, we can certainly look the Chairman in the eye.

But who wants that kind of domin-ion? Borrowed clothes may be too big for us. Instinct should rule, in this context. Like Prometheus on his rock, we should stand by our inmost preferences even if an eagle—an un-American one, of course-should come and peck form of jewelry, attached to slender silken cords that wind around the neck, waist or wrist. The concept is particularly good with strapless and one-shoulder dresses, and soft tunic shapes. But there is nothing wrong with tempering the severity of a man-tailored suit with some of this fragility. The collection includes gardenias, lilies, sweet peas and wisteria, some trimmed with tiny beads and others opening up to stamens of rhinestones. Well, you can still catch up on the gossip of the salesmen and the cuttters at Dubrow's, on 38th and Seventh. Just tilt your chair up at an interesting table (that's your reservation) and go get your soup.

The orthography for New York names is a constant challenge at New York's balf-dozen Chinese-language dailies. In Chinese, each character represents a sound and you must recognize the ideograph to read it.

comment on the subject matter, but Mr. Espy was seen sleeping peacefully through most of the discus-of the so-called gypsy cab companies operate. They call it, for some reason, "horse hire."

Whatever bappens with that proposal, it seems certain that the breakup of the fleets will continue. Individual owner-drivers, especially those that are organized into radio systems, almost invariably pro-vide bigger, newer and cleaner cabs and more efficient service, at the same price, and iocreasing numbers of New Yorkera are becoming aware of the difference.

Owner-drivers, more often than not, drive Ford 10's without the awful plexiglass partition that makes the passenger feel like a prisoner of the NKVD on the way to Lubianka, and that's reason enough to add a quarter to the tip.

One of the more interesting programs on radio is "American Popular Song With Alec Wilder and Friends," which is heard on Sunday evenings at 9:30

WNYC-FM. Johany Hartman, whose recordings of Cole Porter songs will be heard on the series next month, is currently appearing at Michael'a Pub.

He is a slim, soft-spoken man who has been bouncing around the world of popular music for 25 years, admired by the cognoscenti but without the sort of mass following that leads to show-room bookings in Las Vegas.
"Working with Alec was an education," he said the other night between sets. "I'd been singing a lot of those Porter songs for years without ever knowing who wrote them." This space welcomes verse, anecdotes and other sbort contributions of merit. Writers of published material will receive a bottle of champagne. Contributions cannot be acknowledged or returned unless accompanied by a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

roadway had 70 theaters, from Herald Square to Columbus Circle, when Nat Dorfman began his career as a theatrical press agent in 1920. He was a graduate of Townsend Harris High School and still a student at Columbia University. Mr. Dorfmen has gradually given up his Broadway assignments during the 17 years he has been publicity director for the New York City Opera. And now he will retire from that, too, when his contract ends May 29.

"They're after me to write my mem-oirs." said Mr. Dorfman, who has edited or written for a number of publica-tions. "but so far it's just talk." There is plenty to talk and write about. He worked for George White on all "editions" of the "Scandals," for Florenz Ziegfeld, for the Theater Guild under Lawrence Languer and Theresa Helburn, and on Irving Berlin's "This Is the Army." Mr. Dorfman even tried Hollywood for about three years. He is a native New Yorker and here, he said, is where he will stay,

he Charlotte Russe? It Survives

By RICHARD F. SHEPARD

海海3~ ...:

St.

Charlotte Russe, that venerabla York specialty that left generaof city kids with white mus-; on their faces, is not extinct like ancient Chinese jade, it is to come by.

> Charlotte Russe was a street cy that, as a perishable, came n autumn and disappeared, mosthen the weather turned hot. Bas-, it was a piece of sponge cake d by a beap of whipped cream a cherry at its pinnacle. Somewith fruit, sometimes with ikles, but these were optional. cost a nickel at most and came in artitioned round white cup with a reable bottom that you could push is you made your way through the nped cream. You bought it in candy , bakeries and sometimes in fivelime stores. And it was always - in the street; it was not a dessert candy store, which today is either a luocheonette or a dry-goods card shop. but there are still bakeries here and there with a sense of tradition that still turn out the Charlotte Russe.

Out in the Glen Oaks neighborhood of Queens, Murray Beberman sells it in the old-style cups at the Garden Bake Shop, 265-03 Union Turopike. He puts out a couple of dozen every day, with fruit and pineapple included. It costs 45 ceots. The customers are past the bloom of youth and their Charlotte Russe is a short trip back to the days wheo the stomach was strong.

Up in Spring Valley, Bennett and Loretta Pakula who came out of the Bronx to found Pakula's Bake Shop at 108 North Main Street, also sell the Charlotte Russe with fresh whipped cream and freshly cooked strawberry filling and maraschino cherries. The only change is in the cup, which is now Styrofoam and fixed. They start making them in the fall, according to custom, and sell them for 59 cents each. The Pakulas, who make all sorts of traditional as well as contemporary goodies, fied that the Charlotte Russe is a good seller to older people and even to young ones who are discovering it for the first time.

But for most people the Charlotte Russe is a mere memory. It was part. of growing up in New York. They remember the candy store with the cups lined up in a glass case fitted with a door that they opened to pick that Charlotte Russe they wanted.

"The man in the store knew I couldn't afford it," sald Sam Levenson, the Brooklyn observer whose humor has made eternal verities of the customs of bygone days. "When he saw me near the case, he hollered, 'Don't

Mr. Levenson remembered that it was a "take-out item."

"You ate it on the street but not where there were kids on bicycles or skates who might knock you down," he said. "I used to go partners on a three-cent Charlotte Russe. And then we would have 32 people ask for a lick. I was a champion, I could lick a Charlotte Russe for six hours before I hit the sponge cake.

"I have never had a cherry that tasted as good as the ooe on a Charlotte Russe. Charlotte Russe? Nobody knew to call it that. We called it a tcharla droos.. You couldn't get that at home."

The Charlotte Russe seems to have faded after World War II, but the reasons might call for a seminar or a doctoral thesis. Higher labor costs in bakeries, more whipped cream available to the masses, a fashion change of the sort that rocks Seventh Avenua. Take your choice. But it had an honorable Even its name is shrouded in antiquity. According to the Wise Encyclopedia of Cooking, it was named for Princess Charlotte of France, whoever she was, and this seems not to have been commoo currency in the purlieus of New York.

No committees have been formed to preserve the endangered species that is the Charlotte Russe. It is on nobody's campaign platform and the groups that want to save New York doo't seem to remember it. But the Charlotte Russe, still lip-smacking in memory, has found that the movable bottom has nearly pushed up to the top of the cup of time. Soon there may be oo more.

ne of the clues to first-class quick or 60-minute cooking - or any other successful cookery for that matter - is logic and organization. A case in point is the main dish outlined below: Cornish game hen bonne femme, an American biro cooked in a traditional French manner. It has, by the way, all the components necessary for a main course-chicken, potatoes and mush-

As far as organization is concerned if you read through the recipe—and you should read through recipes before you start to cook-you will discover that the cooking of the dish is divided into two parts. The Cornish hens are haked for 20 minutes. During this period potatoes and mushrooms are cooked in a bit of butter. These two operations could and should occur simultaneously to diminish the total cooking time.

Incidentally, this dish brings up another interesting point: Can one say with authenticity exactly how many a particular dish will serve? The answer is, not really. Who are the guests and what is the nature of their appetites? When this recipe was recently tested, three people at the table were content to dine on half a bird each. A fourth devoured a whole bird. To arrive at the number of servings in this case you have to estimate the appetites of those you are feeding. Thus, the recipe below may serve as many as eight light caters, or suffice for only four very bungry guests. Cornish game hens bonne femme (the name means "good wife" and implies that the dish is bourgeois in concept) would go very well with nothing more than a tessed green salad and pur-chased first-quality ice cream or fresh

Q I am planning to roast my first turkey this Thanksgiving. There will be about 20 guests for dinner, and i wonder what size turkey f will need and instructions for roasting it. The turkey will be

A 13-t:-15-pound turkey when stuffed should serve 20 people generously and conceivably as many as 24. Here are the instructions for roasting a turkey of that weight when stuffed and trussed.

1. Preheat the oven to 375 degrees

2. Arrange a neatly trussed, stuffed 13-to-15-pound turkey, breast side up, in a baking pan. Arrange the feet, neck and gizzard around it. Rub the turkey all over with two tablespoons of butter. 3. Place the baking pan in the oven and bake one

4. Cover the turkey loosely with two sheets of foil. Bake 30 minutes, lifting the foil and basting

5. Reduce the oven heat to 325 degrees. Cootioue to baste and bake two and one-half to three hours looger. A meat thermometer inserted in the thigh of the turkey (away from the booe) should register a temperature of about 160 degrees. Let the turkey rest half an hour out of the oven before carving.

6. As the turkey rests, skim the fat from the roasting pan. To the drippings that remain add half a cup of water. Cook, stirring, about five minutes. Add this to giblet gravy.

On occasion f see recipes that yield, to choose on arbitrary figure, 12 servings. Quite often these recipes might interest me, but I rarely cook for more than four or, on occasion, six. Can f simply divide the ingredients by two or three and proceed from there with the same baking times or whatever?

A Dividing recipes is easy and geoerally recom-meoded, but you must exercise your own judgmeot on some points of cooking. For example, if you have a cake batter made with a dozeo eggs and the recipe specifies baking the cake for an hour, it is quite obvious that a cake batter made with half the eggs plus half the other ingredients must bake a shorter while.

On the other hand, if your recipe is for a sauté of chicken, the decreased ingredients and cooking times should remain more or less the same. You would, of course, have to select a smaller skillet or casserole or whatever to cook the chicken in.

When a recipe says "Bake at 420 asgress to minutes, then reduce the heat to 350 degrees, does one simply turn the setting to 350 or is it necessary to keep the oven door open until the thermometer reads 350? When a recipe says "Bake at 425 degrees for 10

A Unless the recipe specifies leaving the oven door open, doo't do it. Simply turn the setting to the desired lower temperature.

Process I have been searching in vain for a recipe for rum butter. Could you supply me with

A It is purely conjecture, but rum butter is probably an old-fashioned hard sauce made with rum rather than vanilla or another spirit such as cognac or whisky. Here is a recipe for hard sauce con-

Cream one-half pound (one cup) butter and add two cups sifted confectioners' sugar and one egg white (two tablespoons) alternately. Beat well after each addition. Beat in two more cups sifted con-fectioners' sugar and one and one-half tablespoons dark rum alternately, beating well after each addition. Store in a screw top jar. Serve at room temperature. Yield: Four cups.

O Can you please explain the meaning of the term "drawn" butter, which is the menus of seafood restaurants?

A Drawn butter is synonymous with clarified butter. We prefer the latter term. To understand the term "drawo butter" it is best to explain the method of making clarified butter. To prepare it, add any given amount of solid butter to a saucepan or, preferably, a glass measuring cup. Let the hutter melt over a low heat or place the saucepan or cup in an oven preheated to 200 degrees. Watch closely uotil the butter is completely melted. Do not let it simmer. When the butter is melted, remove it from the heat and let it stand until the milky solids sink to the bottom. You will note the clear golden liquid on top and the whitish, milky solution oo the bottom. Carefully spoon off or pour off the golden liquid into another cootainer. The name drawn butter originated with the idea of "drawing off" the golden liquid Clarified butter has many uses in cooking. It is preferable for making butter sauces such as hollandaise and béarnaise. Ideally, clarified butter is preferable for sautéeing or frying foods, because the burning point is bigher than that of regular butter. Clarified butter will keep quite a while in the refrieerator.

A Cookbook On Charcuterie

THE ART OF MAKING SAUSAGES, PATES, AND OTHER CHARCUTERIE. By Jane Grigson. Knopf. 349 pages, Paperback. $4.95.

A reissue of a book published well before its time, this complete and enticing work brings the savory art of the charcuterie into home kitchens. Economiart of the charctiteric into nome kitchens. Economical though mouthwatering patés, elegant galantines, sauces and relisbes and a number of fresh pork dishes are included in carefully written recipes that are illustrated where necessary. Try the rillettes in the following recipe spread on hot toasted croutons of French bread.

Rillettes de Paris

pound sowbelly o tablespoons good lard 1 tablespoon salt .

Pepper and spices according to taste

1. The point of this recipe is the very prolonged, gentle cooking of the pork, so that it is in the most melting condition possible by the time you have finished—and not dry and sandy.

2. Cut the meat into pieces about 1 inch or 1½ inches long. Put them on to cook with the lard in a heavy pan on a very low flame. Keep stirring so that the meat colors evenly to a pale gold.

C.3. Pour off the fat, and leave the meat to go on cooking for five bours more oo the lowest possible heat. From time to time pour on a little water to prevent the meat from sticking

3 4. Let the meat get quite cold. Then drop it onto the blades of an electric blender, if you have one. Otherwise you are coodemned to chopping and pounding. The final result is a smooth unctuous pate that you season with sait, pepper and spices and add, according to your own discretion, as much of the drained-off fat as you like. Too high a flame will fry the pieces of meat and harden them, so this is the point to watch.

Yield About 1/2 pound.

It's Not as Unlikely as It Sounds

There are some flavors in foods that would seem—super-ficially at least—to be diametrically opposed. They might in-clude chicken and clams which do, in truth, complement each other notably. At least in the following recipe:

Chicken and Clams With Spaghetti

2 three-pound chickens, cut into serving pieces Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste

16 tablespoons butter 2 sprigs fresh thyme or 1/2 teaspoon dried

Turning Leftover Turkey Into Food

By PIERRE FRANEY

There are those—and not without reason—who contend that the best thing about Thanksgiving are the uses to which cold turkey can be put the next

Sampling recently on a cold, blustery day a rich-bodied turkey soup made with the carcass of leftover turkey (plus leftover giblet gravy and leftover scraps of meat), it did seem even choicer, more gratifying than the turkey when it came bot from the oven the day before. It is a soup of the sort that my-parents made when I was a child in a small town in Burgundy about 15 miles from Chablis.

A recipe for that soup is listed here along with other tasty dishes based on the leftover bird-there a casserole of turkey and broccoli and a coldturkey salad.

Turkey Salad a la Suisse

- 4 cups skinless, boneless turkey meat, white or dark or o combination of both, the meat cut into
- I egg yolk
  I teaspoon imported mustard such as Dijon or Düsseldorf Juice of half a lemon
- Solt to taste I tablespoon drained green peppercorns or freshly
- ground pepper to taste

  I cup peanut, vegetable or corn oil

  I cup diced heart of celery
- 14 cups diced, peeled, cored apple cup walnut meots or toasted almonds tablespoons finely chopped parsley Broccoli speors with oil and lemon (see recipe) for garnish, optional.

Prepare the turkey meat and set it aside. 2. Place the yolk in a mixing bowl and add the mustard, lemon juice, salt and peppercorns. Add the oil gradually, stirring rapidly with a wire whisk. Wheo blended and smooth, add the turkey meat, celery and apple and fold these solids into the

3. Arrange the turkey salad io the center of a serving dish and mound it neatly. Scatter the nuts over the top and sprinkle with chopped parsley. Surround the salad, if desired, with the broccoli spears. Yield: 6 to 8 servings.

Broccoli Spears with Oil, Lemon

Trim off the tough base of one two-pound bunch of broccoli. Cut the broccoli ioto neat sections. Drop the sections ioto boiling salted water to cover and simmer about eight to 10 minutes. The broccoli should remain somewhat crisp. Drain immediately, and run under cold running water until chilled. Drain well. Place io a bowl and toss with the juice of half a lemon, salt, pepper and about one-third cup peanut, vegetable or corn oil.

AN you really identify all the ingredients in a particular dish and/or can you reproduce almost any dish in your own kitchen?" The answer, of course, is yes. It may be that my reardon to both queries is no stranger than my own awa and wonder that anyone can play a piano by ear, understand the intricacies of chess, or dance the tango, the Lord having blessed me with a tin ear, a talent for no games more complicated than jacks and two left feet.

Taste—the mouth's response to the sensation of eating and drinking—is a strange and complex and complicated thing. I am convinced that there are a multitude of people (Americans mostly to judge hy the people who buy TV dinners and frozen pizzas) who have no taste whatsoever.

They detest caviar (which may be just as well, current prices being what they are), dote on overcooked lamb, abhor dishes made with tripe and other innerds, consider smails an abomination and couldn't comprehend the sublime virtues of a fish in white wine sauce if it were made by George Auguste Escoffier reincarnate.

And yet I think that some people, and I suspect a great number of people, are born with the gustatory equivalent of perfect pitch. Whether they develop that ultimate aense of taste and smell (where taste is concerned, smell is irrevocably interbound) is another matter. The pursuit and sharpening of taste involves continuous and reflexive familiarization with and analysis of myriad flavors and odors.

I have an acquaintance in the wine field who told me quite seriously that he believes in reiocarnation and that in his past life he was a canine (a basset hound, he hoped) for as a child he sniffed everything, flowers, berbs, grass, the leaves of plants, other animals and so on simply for the pure joy of smelling.

I boastfully claim a kindred nature, and if I were placed in a clused room of filtered air, I could conjure up duzens of the smells of my childhood. The scent of newly mown hay, the warm, musty smell of freshly hailed cotton (I grew up in the Mississippl Delta) and more than these the co-mingling nf flavors in my mother's kitchen—onions and celery and green peppers sautéed in butter.

I have total recall of the first time I smelled or dined on tarragon. It was in Patis in a restaurant on the Ile St. Louis called Le Bossu. It no longer exists, but I supped on the most elegant scrambled eggs (or so I thought then) known to the gods, and there were chopped fresh tarragon leaves to perfume them. It was a time of ultimate hliss.

I also know, incidentally, that the palate can be wildly confused and with no damage done, except, perhaps, to one's ego. One way to do this involves a game which, if you care to play, can net you five to one (an arbitrary ratio) if you can find a taker or two who boasts about his unerring palate.

It is a blindfold test involving, let us say, seven or more strong spirits such as Scotch, vodla, hourbon, rye, cognac, rum and gin. The beverages are listed on a scorecard, and as samples are poured at random the blindfolded subject is asked to rate one at a time.

Characteristically, the subject is able to identify the first and possibly the second sample. After that he is more than apt to confuse a majority of the remaining alcohols, mistaking rum fur cognac, rye for hourbon, hourbon for rum, even cognac for vodka and so on.

rum, even cognac for vodka and so on.

Having participated in this charade with a few of the grander gurus of food and drink, I can vouch for the fact that a score of 50 percent is excellent. A score of 70 percent is phenomenal and, in my experience, at least, a acore of 100 percent is unknown.

Oddly enough, there is one drink that is more often identified correctly than any of the others. That is gin, probably because of the distinct nature of the jumper flavor.

ture of the juniper flavor.

There are numerous other ways to modify taste, and one of the most dramatic, in our experience, came in the form of a harmless pill brought to my kitchen by a young researcher who works in flavors.

The substance in the pill was derived from a natural growing plant commonly called miracle fruit. The plant is bookishly called Sysepalum dulcificum. The plant derives from tropical areas in West Africa, and now is also grown in the United States.

The "miracle fruit" derived from the plant resembled a light purple aspirintablet with the same texture. It was held in the mouth until it dissolved, and immediately after we were encouraged to suck on half a lemon. It was for all the world like a saccharine-sweet undiscovered fruit. A Scotch and soda taken shortly thereafter was all but undrinkahle, and a glass of wine was ton sweet to be recognizable as wine. The taste modification endured for approximately 20 minutes.

Although miracle fruit is little known to the general public, it is widely known and discussed in laboratory circles that deal in food and flavor analysis.

People who have dined on artichokes, if they have probing and sensitive taste buds, know that they alter the flavor of such a basic item as water. Artichokes alter the taste in auch a way that water taken immediately afterward so takes on a distinctly sweet flavor.

Similarly, to a more or less degree, they alter the flavor of wine, which is why we know certain purists (yours truly not included) who will not serve and flatty eschew artichokes in any and all forms during the course of so-called "gourmet" meals where fine wines are to be poured. Similarly, they avoid salads tossed with vinegar.

It is a personal thing, but during the course of a meal in which my colleagues eschew artichokes and saked with vine; ar, they wind up their festivities bethed in clouds of cigar smoke. And, as I have noted at other times, if there is anything that can cripple, deaden or anesthetize my personal sensibilities, it is cigar fumes. Given my choice, I would prefer an artichoke served as a salad and bathed

Although we make modest claims for an ability to detect subtle seasonings; and so on, we admit to justifiable confusion where the cuisiness of three countries or regions are concerned. These are India, Mexico and Indonesia. And we hunger for them all.

The spur for the confusion is ohvious; it is the highly complex mixture of spices that go into many of the hest cishes of each area. We have before us an Indian recipe which we greatly admire for tandonri chicken, the delicious "harbecued" item in which chicken—on home territory at least—is bathed in a multitude of spices, then baked in a fiery hot underground clay in addition to onion, garlic, ginger, lemon juice and yogurt, the recipe calls for a blend of spices including coriander, rumin, turmeric, mace, nutmeg, cloves, cinnamon, cayenne pepper, cardamom seeds and cumin seeds.

Similarly many of the dishes of Mexico and Indonesia employ a highly complex melange of seasonings, and to analyze such foods the best one can do is hazard, one hopes, an educated guess. Oddly enough, and here is a personal reaction. Chinese cookery, like the French and Italian, responds unite easily to basic analysis. The flavorings or seasonings are far more subtle he sense of taste may be man's most pampered but least understood sensory system. For all the culinary skills that have been devoted to induiging the hedonism of the taste huds, virtually nothing is known about how taste works on the chemical or hiological levels.

Despite the best efforts of dozens of independent scientists and a major research center devoted exclusively to studying taste and smell for the last eight years, nobody yet knows, for instance, exactly why caviar tastes like caviar and not like hamburger. In fact, nobody really knows why sugar tastes sweet and not sour. Or why salt is salty.

There is no doubt among the researchers that the molecules of which a food is composed somehow make contact with nerves in the tongue which, in turn, send a signal that the brain interprets as a particular flavor. Nobody knows what it is about a molecule of, for example, sugar that makes it trigger a sweet signal.

The mnlecule itself does not travel to the brain. Rather, something about it—its shape or electrical charge or ability to react with some nther molecule in or near the taste nerves or something else—triggers the "sweet" message to the brain.

As yet no one has discovered much structural or other similarity among substances that taste the same. The classic sweet substances are sugars which are relatively small and simple molecules, but there are some proteins.

which are vastly larger and more complex, that also taste sweet. Some proteins, ounce for ounce, are a thousand times sweeter than sugar.

As long as taste researchers cannot

As long as taste researchers cannot say what it is that makes a simple, one-chemical substance like sugar taste sweet, they remain very far from explaining what gives a chef's dish, with its hundreds of natural and added substances, its particular flavor. Most foods are composed of scores of hundreds of natural chemicals and most dishes combine several such foods with spices, each of which is composed of many discreet chemical entities.

Despite the millions of possible combinations of these flavors and the obvious fact that people can distinguish scores of flavors, even when they are mixed, scientists who atudy taste bave never been able to agree on more than four primary qualities of taste—sweet, sour, bitter and salty.

Every taste sensation, most experis hold, is a combination of one or more of these four qualities in varying degrees. Scientists and gournets agree, however, that enjoying a well-prepared meal is more than the simple exercise of taste. It also involves the appearance of the dish, what it smells like, its physical texture, its temperature and even the concentration of pain-inducing chemicals derived from pepper or chili in it.

Although scientists have found inherited differences in the ability to taste certain flavors, usually involving deficiencies that are the gustatory equivalent of color blindness, the vast majority nf people are endowed with essentially the same physical apparatus for appreciating food,

The main components are, of course, the taste buds—7,000 to 10,000 microscopic pores, usually clustered on certain papiliae of the tongue but also situated in the upper throat, the rearmost area of the cheeks and the palate. The pores are able to open or close, admitting varying quantities of what some researchers call tastants. Some pores are at the bottom of folds in the tongue and only open to tastants when the mechanical action of foods of rough texture opens the crevices.

Inside the gustatory pore, as it is sometimes called, are other cells and membranes and, under these, the ends of the taste nerves.

No one knows whether tastant molecules leave the taste had once they have sent their message or whether they stay there, continuing to send the flavor message and mixing with new tastants that enter the bud.

send the flavor message and mixing with new tastants that enter the bud.

How many particles of tastant can a bud bold? Do taste huds get full? Is this the mechanism by which the first tastant modifies the flavor of the second? It is known that taste bud cells live for only a few days and are constantly being replaced.

While the taste nerves are sending their signals to the brain, other nerves are also relaying messages. Tactile nerves sense the food's texture. Olfactory nerves in the nose detect odors. Optic nerves, before the morsel disappears from sight, pick up evidence of appearance. Pain-sensitive nerves react to substances in pepper and chilis.

There were the makeshift turkeys we bought in Europe as expatriates, there were the massive, flavorless turkeys whose additives caused cancer in laboratory animals, there were the turkeys raised in darkness to the sounds of music, there were free turkeys, there were imported turkeys, there were imported turkeys, there were Tom turkeys and Jane turkeys, and in the variety of their stuffings—oysters, hread crumhs, paté de foie gras, forcemeat, chestnuts, herbs, and stews—one could recall the rise and fall of tyrants, the good and the bad in the last fifty years and the judgments that had been passed.

How clever of the Pilgrims, beginning a new life in a wilderness of savage rituals, to have settled on a harvest festival for their first ceremony. The harvest festival is the oldest known to man—this solemnization of gathering crops against the menace of death, this knowledge that in the last days of the year one sees the germs of the year's beginnings. (Up in Boston where they are tripe and fishcakes the day went mobserved.) How clever of the Pilgrims to have made

To describe a robust man distributing meat to his family is close to impossible. A happy, happy family has come to be scorned and to represent everything from imperialism, fiscal and erotic hypocrisy and the multinational munitions industry in the tyranny of prejudice. And yet these families, with their embarrassingly intimate knowledge of one another, will enjoy a love that is serene and joyous and profound if not lasting. That Aunt Louisa is dead drunk and that cousin Randolph has done something lewd in the hall closet before coming to table is an old and tirescene store.

Our family had an incontrovertible foothold in the past: our maid was the daughter of an Adams coachman and she once ate all the hrandied sugar lumps around the plum pudding and was found on the wooden floor of the kitchen (this was before lineleum) dead drunk, giggling helplesaly and contributing a bearing or milestone for our recollections. A more vivid milestone was The Day That Coustn Anna Made A Scene. Cousin Anna was a striking and bony woman with, as I recall, the massive nose, coppery skin and jet hair of a Natik Indian. She had a degree in classics from Cambridge. When Anna was taken to the dining room that Thankspiving she stood at the threshold and exclaimed linudly: "How can you to this? How can you do this when half the populations of this world are starving?" It was the last voice I was to hear that linked so purely her destiny to the destiny of the planet. My dog barked. A cah was called. Anna departed. Six weeks later she was found in her cold, classical library in Braintree, Massachusetts, dead of starvation.

The collecting of strays for the table that so absorbed my mother still seems to go on among my friends and neighbors. Mother invited all kinds; the crippled watch repairman in his wheelchair, the blind, the halt and all of the lovely that she had been able to corrai in trains and buses and beaches and in the lubby at Symphony Hall during the intermission. This was thought by my brother and me to be touching and comical since pride and arrogance were plainly involved, but so was her respect and knowledge of the cruelty of loneliness.

How strange we must have seemed to these guests and how strange they were to us and while what I remember is my chagrin at my mother's pride in the number of dishes, guests and open fires she could display, I know that my chagrin was lacking.

Stuff the body and the neck cavity of a turkey that is ready to cook.

Make a gash two inches from the tail tip of the turkey and push the tail tip into the cavity. Truss cavity opening with string. Push legs forward and shove the needle through one leg at the point where the cavity and thigh meet. Push needle through cavity and bring it out the other side, going through opposite leg where cavity and thigh join.

Twist the wings securely under the back of the turkey. Push needle through the center of the second wing joint, then weave it through the neck skin, sewing this to the surface skin at the tip of the backbone. Run the needle through the center of the second wing joint on the other side. Cut off the cord and tie the ends together securely.

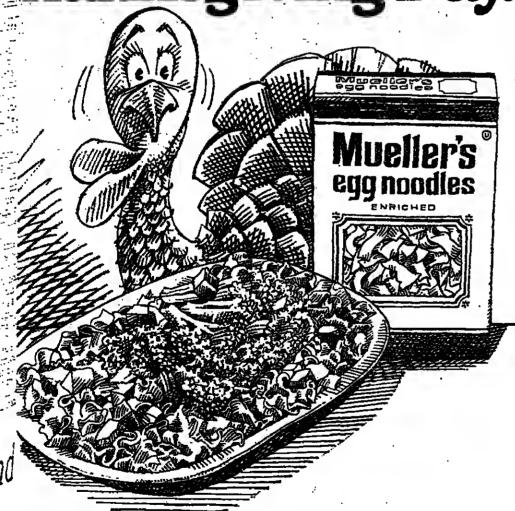

Run the needle through the base of the thigh, just above the thigh hone. Run it all the way through the same position of the opposite thigh. Bring the needle up and around a leg, running the needle through the tender, cartilage like, V-shaped base of the hreast hone.

Bring the cord around the other leg and cut off the cord. Tie the ends to secure the legs close to the hody.

Thanksgiving For Ethnic Pilgrims

Columbus had created Thanksgiving, the menu might have been more inter-kin pie, pecan pie, homemade wines, espresso and fresh fruits.

That was "the kind of meal Columbus would have had, had he proper ingredi-ents with him and the marvelous things we got from the American Indians," said Mr. Giobbi, who lives in Katonah,

It may not be a traditional Thanks-giving for some people, but for Mr. Giobbi it is a tradition. When he was growing up, ravioli was so expensive to make his parents only served it on special occasions. "Thanksgiving was ravioli day," he recalled.

New York, where recent pilgrims of many palates have dined each year in praise of its New World bounty, makes its turkeys gobble in a gastronomic babble. Or the birds may be of a different feather altogether.

There are people with ethnic backgrounds who adhere to the When-in-Rome-do-as-the-Romans-do, theory, and serve a traditional meal; others, like Mr. Giobbi, literally do as the Romans and some don't do at all.

'Number one, I'm not going to kill a turkey," said Geoffrey Holder, who was born in Trinidad and is a choreographer, dancer, singer and director. He said he would probably eat fish. "Number two," he said, "I don't like to give thanks one day a year; I give thanks all year long."

Some draw the line at pumpkin pie or chestnuts or whatever they find unappetizing. Others, such as Tia Sidey, a Bermudian married to an Eng-lishman, serve the traditional minosmeat pie and pumpkin pie and then a third choice—chocolate mousse. "My husbaod likes chocolate mousse," ex-plained Mrs. Sidey, who lives in Darien,

Thanksgiving began with the Pilgrims, who adapted their palates to a new fand in their own style, and that, apparently, is a tradition that has not

Nadia Merzliakow, assistant registrar at Pratt Institute, who emigrated to this country in 1949, from France with her Russian-born parents, will serve chilled vodka, Russian appetizers, fol-lowed by borscht, capon instead of turkey and kisiel, a Russian dessert made from cranberries.

David Liu, a Chinese-born filmmaker, prefers Peking duck or smoked chicken to turkey, which he does not like. But he has no such reservations about cranberries. "I love cranberries," he said enthusiastically, "We have cranberries in China, and I guess it reminds me of China."

Perla Meyers, a cooking teacher and cookbook author, was born in Vienna and grew up in Barcelooa, Spain. When she first came to this country 10 years ago, she was impressed with the traditional American Thanksgiving menu but longed for a more European cuisine. So she and her husband, Robert, a former Pennsylvanian, have compromised. Some years they have a traditional American menu; other years, a menu of her own making, which has included: booed turkey en croute, braised turkey in white beans and turkey with red cabbage and sausage.

"Last year, after a mixed-up meal that I complained about, for a Christmas present I got a do-it-yourself kit," said Mr. Meyers, a vice president of the merchandise division of American Express, "In this big box came a turkey, stuffing, the whole bit, and I had to make Christmas dinner."

This year, the Meyerses are having Basque turkey, a recipe that calls for the turkey to be served in a sauce of tomatoes, hot peppers, whole cloves of garlic and white wine. The turkey, preceded by a chestnut soup, will be garnished with pureed vegetables. Apple mousse in apricot sauce will be served for dessert.

Leon Lianides, the owner of the Coach House restaurant, said that his first Thanksgiving in 1929 impressed him with the elegance of simple American food.

"I remember my aunt was cooking." recalled Mr. Lianides, who came from Corfu, Greece. "Of course, I got the first glimpses of roasting a turkey and carving a turkey and of course the pumpkin pie. All the basic wholesome, simple, healthy foods, which I call clean food. I think it left an indelible picture of the simplicity of good food that every American is blessed to enjoy."

His family will have a basically American meal with just a few Greek touches —the turkey will have a Greek stuffing of chopped beef, rice and other ingredients, and, in addition to cranberry sauce, he will serve a sauce made of quince, a fruit popular in the Mediterranean. Otherwise, the meal will consist of pearl onions, peas in cream sauce, sweet potatoes, pumpkin nie and mincemeat pie.

Hanoah Tillich, widow of Paul Tillich, the theologian, has been a traditionalist, ever since the Tilliches arrived bere in 1933 from Germany. "We celebrate it as an entrance to the United States festivities," she explained. "You see, at that time, we were so filled with emo-

Even with all the disbes and silverware, something in the way of floral decoration is called for. Ronaldo Maia, of Ronaldo Maia Flowers, at 27 East 67th Street, says that if given three days be can turn out a 2-foot by 3-foot boxwood turkey, scented with cin-namon, sitting atop a nest of vine branches. This model costs $75. Bigger hirds command higger prices.

Three days are also necessary for a $25 arrangement of vegetables (carrots and corn) and fruit (grapes and apples), mixed with narcissus in the 18th century French manner.

For really last-minute shoppers, his stock includes pineapples in a crown of galax leaves in a straw basket from China ($18) or a basket full of potpourri, with a smell like baked apples, at $10 and up.

Hunter Flowers, at 1055 Park Avenue, at 87th Street, suggests harvest themes — centerpieces involving raw carrots, cabbages, pumpkins, wheat, asparagus, dried corn, fail leaves, chrysanthemums, at $15 and up. An offbeat and sophisticated arrangement consists of formal flowers — irises, narcissus and tulips mixed with stalks of wheat.

Jean-Jacques Bloos, whose store at 1025 Lexington Avenue, between 73d and 74th Streets bears his name, favors consumable centerpieces that are com-posed of nuts, strawberries and bits of melon.

More elaborate arrangements, taking their cue from the sort favored by the medieval Della Robbias, must be ordered two or three days in advance. They make use of artichokes, asparagus, small tomatoes, cauliflowers, rad-ishes, parsiey, beans, onions and shal-lots. Prices start at $75. Mr. Bloos says, "Thanksgiving is not a day for flowers, but for food and fruit."

Food and decoration are combined in the herb wreaths available in the delicacy department oo the first floor of Bloomingdale's. The wreaths are made out of dill, thyme, sage, peppermint, savory, tansy, coriander, yarrow, marporam and chili peppers—all grown in vermont and dried. If you get tired of looking at the wreath, its berbs are good for the pot for up to six months. The 10-inch diameter model goes for $25. The 15-inch size costs $40. To keep guests at bay while waiting for the turkey, dips and crackers might be offered in the cimabar-colored, black-trimmed oriental lacquered double tray unit-about 7 inches in diameter - available at Jenny B. Goode at 1194 Lexington Avenue for $6.50.

Some people aren't content with turkey and stuffing and mashed potatoes and gravy and pumpkio pie, even if it is all preceded by crackers and dips in a cinnabar-colored, black-trimmed oriental tray.

Here.

Figs baked with almonds and bay leaves, $2.19 a pound at Balducci's at 424 Avenue of the Americas; and as long as you're in the neighborhood. sweet-potato pie, at Horn of Plenty, 91 Charles Street, at $4 for a 9-inch pie

(that's diameter, not depth).
Or cranberry loaf, or pumpkin loaf, or walnut and date loaf, all homemade, all $2.20 in a size weighing slightly over a pound that yields about eight slices, all available at the New York Exchange for Women's Work, at 541 Madison Avenue.

Kron Chocolatier, only a brisk wadstrawberry and orange slices into chocolate and does the same with grapes and sells them at $10 a pound or $5 a half-pound. Just the thing with a cup of espresso. But we're getting shead of ourselves.

When it comes to drinking on Thanksgiving knowledgeable sources say to start out with some champagne as an aperitif. With the turkey one can forapertif. With the turkey one can forget about the usual advice about white wine. Drink a red, because the bird has a heavy flavor and can be treated as one would treat game.

So try some beaujolais. But steer clear of clarets. Those who insist on a white wine might direct their attention toward the full-bodied Alsatiens, like a reaction of the state of t riesling or gewürztraminer. If you're huying American, go for a zinfandel.

Now, since there are likely to be some children around, think of giving them a punch. It's an apple cranberry punch and the recipe follows:

4 cups apple cider 4 cups cranberry juice cocktail
3 cinammon sticks

12 whole cloves
I small seedless orange, cut into

1/4-inch slices.
Place the cider, cranberry juice cocktail and cinnamoo in a pan. Stick the cloves around the orange slices and add them to the mixture. Bring to a boil and simmer for five minutes. Before serving, remove the orange

A lot of things are the same at Maxim's too, though some are different. The other evening Arthur Rubinstein, now 80 years old, was having supper there with Leonard Bernstein and a group of friends after a stunning all-Berlioz concert that Mr. Bernstein had conducted.

The great planist peering through eyes that are nearly failing him, waved gaily at the 1890's naoghty wall paintings and the bay window on the customer. While he are smoked salmon and billy-by soup, Mr. Rubinstein remi-nisced with Mr. Bernstein about concerts they had given together. They pounded the table and sounded off oompah-pah-pooms and teetle-teetletees as they discussed passages of various pieces or characterized composers on the white linen surface that had become an imaginary keyboard.

Mr. Bernstein slapped out some bits of Rachmaninoff and Stravinsky on the tablecloth, which reminded him of a friend of his, a brittiant musician he said, who had a parlor trick of playing "April Showers" in the manner of every great composer. It was a shaggy dog kind of story, going on with long phrases of Chopin, of Debussy, of Wagner, of Rimsky-Kursakoff and others, and then suddenly breaking into a tinny-voiced rendition of "April Showers," always the same.

Mr. Rubinstein, laughing tears, begged him to stop. But that only encouraged Mr. Bernstein to some more pretend-piano, and after a while he hegan to think mazurka. He jumped up. saying, "This is silly, we must dance." By then the other customers had gone. and members of the orchestra were eating dinner in the corner. Mr. Bernstein ran up to the piano, on the third tier . of the precariously layered bandstand, while the rest of the party sashayed around the dance floor.

Mr. Bernstein's next idea was that it was silly for him to be playing a po-lonuise with the great man on the floor. So he said, "Arthur, you must play." Mr. Rubinstein went to the upright and began attacking it with a will to set the whole world dancing. It certainly set Mr. Bernstein to dancing what may or may not have been a polonaise but was certainly tively.

Suddeoly, the conductor's partner caught her breath and said, "My God, Lennie, do you realize we're dancing to Rubinstein?" "Yes." he said grinning. "That's the point,"

Now he runs Lam Xuan (his wife's name, which means spring orchid) at 30. Rue du Printemps, off the Boulevard Pereire.

"Yesterday 1 was a diplomat, today I'm 2 restaurateur," he said. "It's really the same orofession, receiving people, establishing good contacts, and presenting the image of Viernam. This time I offer the gastronomy."

Mr. Tran has priced his menu a little higher than the average Vietnamese restaurants that abound in Paris and provides more delicate food, all from recipes that have been handed down in his family for generations.

They are from the south, between

If it is almost impossible to find perfectly made French croissants, Italran breads, and Danish pastry in this country, that fact is, at least, understandable. This is, after all, not France, Italy or Denmark. But apple pie?

Considering that this is the most American of ail desserts, and a national aymbol, it is dismaying to realize how rarely one is presented with a properly baked piece of apple pie.

Instead of slightly firm and tart apple slices, gently caramelized with sugar and aromatic with cinnamon and nutmeg, juicy but never soupy, and encased in tender, crisp and savory crusts, we are asked to accept syrupy sweet apples cooked to mush between crusts that are as tasteless as they are textureless, crusts that are, in fact, often indistinguishable from the card-board of the boxes in which they are

This search then was to find the glorious exceptions, creditable apple pies from local sources, most of them bakeries, plus a few caterers and res-taurants that bake pies to order. Many the city's best bakeries, such as Bonté, Dumas and Colette, were not included because they do not make traditional American style apple pie.

Represented in this round-up were pies from Le Cheesecake Elegant, Mrs. Herbst's, the Palermo Bakery, the New York Exchange for Woman's Work, the Country Host, Miss Grimble, G & M Pastries, Leonard's, Maude's Pies, William Greenberg, Bloomingdale's whose pies are made by the Eclair bake shops, Stork's, a highly-touted bakery in the Whitestone section of Queens, and the Omnibus restaurant in Greenwhich Vil-

With only one exception, the pies sampled had one common flaw—their bottom crusts were not crisp. The flaw is probably traceable to the aluminum foil pans in which they were baked and which do not reflect enough heat to produce crisp crusts that resist the juiciness of apples and melting sugar.

Of the 13 pies tested, only four are worth reporting on, and two are tied for first place. The most elegantly beautiful to behold was the apple pie from Le Cheesecake Elégant The flaky cream cheese and butter cookie crust forms the slightly rounded top, which is sprinkled with cinnamon sugar just before it is removed from the oven to take on a crackling burnish. The bottom crust was only a bit too soft and the apples hed a winey pungency, all adding up to a delicate and delightful specimen.

Le Cheesecake Elegant, 150 East 70th Street. 861-8740. Cost: $3,95 for ao 8-inch pie, $5 for a 9-inch pie.

An entirely different sort of pie, but just as irresistibly delicious was the high-domed, golden brown creation turned out at Mrs. Herbst's Strudel is the big specialty at this Austro-Hungarian pastry sbop and the apple pie might well be considered a first cousin.

The paper-thin crust remained miraculously crisp on the bottom, even after three days in the refrigerator. This was because very fine breadcrumbs were sprinkled on the crust before the apple stices were laid on it. The crumbs absorb the juices that bake out of the apples, and so ward off sogginess. Apples in this pie were a sweet and sour blend, of greenings and rome beauties, according to the store management, and the fragrance of cinnamon and nutmeg was enhanced by

The fourth-place winner in this piein-the-sky contest is a more-than-merely-decent apple pie available on order from the New York Exchange for Womsn's Work. Here again an unglazed crust with a golden bisque finish covers sour apples that are just a bit too dry and perhaps just a bit too improbably bright yellow. But it all tastes distractingly delicious, especially when

In all cases it is safest to order pies a day shead of time, and all profit by a brief reheating in the oven. To keep the bottom crust crisp or to make it crisper, place the pie, in its baking pan, on a cookie sheet, then place in the lower third of the oven. Do not overheat, or the apples will overcook and disintegrate. Serve the pie warm with cold milk, or vanilla ice cream or chunks of cheddar cheese. # Personal Finance: Aic For Retirement Plans

By RICHARD PHALON

OUSEWIFERY has never been long on fringe benefits—a potted plant on Mother's Day, maybe, and a couple of weeks off in August if there is some place to park the children.

Beginning Jan. 1, though, millions of housewives who do not hold a paying job will become eligible for a perquisite their husbands have been enjoying for almost three years—the right to build up tax-sheltered individual retirement accounts in their own names.

Congress included in the new tax amendments a provisioo designed to recognize the value of the services provided in the home by a nonworking spouse of either sex.

The prime beneficiaries will be wives, although homemaker-husbands stand to benefit, too.

"There was a real concern to give a housewife a chance to build up a retirement account in her own name so that if she is divorced or her busband dies, she can have some resources to call her own," said Earl McGuire Jr., a senior vice president of the Bank of Asheville. N.C., and former chairman of the American Bankers Association committee on individual retirement accounts.

The oew legislation on I.R.A.'s (pronounced like the man's name) extends to nonworking bousewives the benefits of a plan that has gained steadily in popularity since it first went on the

By way of protection against an old age without pension, Congress gave a special break to individuals whn do not have other retirement alternatives. It authorized them to take a tax deduction of 15 percent of whatever they earned or $1,500, whichever is less. The only condition is that the money has to be put in a plan approved by the

For Pasta and Sausage Lovers-2 Basic Luxuries

By CRAIG CLAIBORNE

America is living in an age of unprecedented basics and luxuries for the kitchen, catering to a nationwide involvement in cooking as a pleasure, a hobby to be ranked with other indoor sports. In that respect we are rank bobbyists and our chief new acquisitions are fantastic additions to a kitchen, already loaded wall to wall, storage drawer to storage drawer with worldwide gadgets ranging from an inexpensive $3 knife sharpener called Zip-Zap to, of course, the essential Cuisinart food processor.

The two new additions are a formidable pasta-making machine from Italy and a sensational, if a bit bulky, machine for stuffing homemade sausages. Both of them are in the huxury category—the pasta maker costs $122.50, the sausage stuffer, $225. But what fine new dimensions they've added to our day-to-day bobby.

The advantages of the new pasta machine, which is by Bialetti, over the widely available standard stainless steel machine include the plastic rollers and the fact that it is powered by electricity, which enormously speed up pasta making. The machine can be used for flat sheets of dough such as are used for ravioli and thin strands for noodles. It is sold by Hammacher Schlemmer, 147 East 57th Street.

The sausage stuffer—the trademark is Tre Spade—satisfies our unabashed liking, if not to say insatiable appetite, for homemade sausages. It is ideal for home preparation.

The cylinder that contains the filling for the sausage can accommodate as little as three pounds of meat and up to, perhaps, 20 pounds. It is manually operated and comes equipped with stuffing tubes in assorted sizes and can be used for making anything from chipolatas to large liver-wurst. Expensive, of course, but so is the theater and a fine set of gelf clubs. It is available at the Pottery Barn, 117 East 59th Street. We have long been amused by that segment of the public who will spend prodigal sums of money on such hobbies as golf, tennis, travel, and yet let their kitchens go begging. Furnishing a kitchen properly—comfortably—seems to in-spire a certain guilt in some misguided souls. Not in ours. Cooking is a major pastime and an endless pleasure, and we gleefully accommodate our purse to the kitchen rather than the other way around. Attempting poor stove and a tin skillet is no more to climb a greased pole or running a for feet in a burlap bag, or, as we have said tennis with a loosely strung racket.

We are often asked to outline the details: kitchen, and we offer herewith our though On the facing page there is a checkits consider basic to any kitchen. On the sam few of our favorite things -some essentia

Spinach Ravioli Douglina Using the Pasta Machi

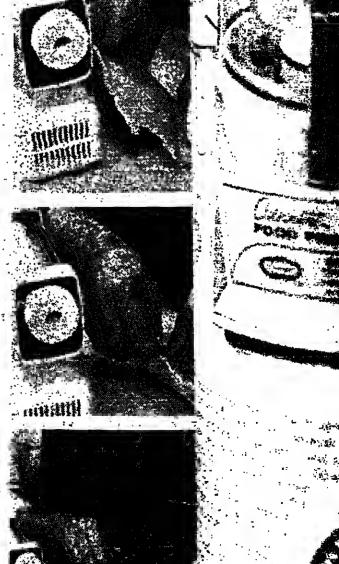

To prepare the dough for spinach ravioli (aee recipe above), knead it to the point where it holds together. Or blend the mixture in the food processor.

Flatten the dough a bit and put it through the pasta machine using the flat roller, the roller set at the maximum opening. The dough will be a bit raggedy.

Fold the ends-overlapping-toward the center. Put the dough through the machine again. Fold it as before. Continue putting the dough. through-using both hands, one to put through, one to receive-and folding until it is smooth.

Gradually decrease the roller opening, putting the strips of dough through the roller each time the opening is decreased. When the opening is at its minimum the dough is ready to be used in preparing ravioli.

A Few of Our Favorites

ROTARY CHEESE GRATER: Ideal for hard, grating cheeses such as parmesan, pecorino and romano. About $12.

FOOD MILL: Ideal for purees of vegetables such as potatoes, broccoli and green beans, as well as for some soups and sauces. About $7.95.

MEAT MALLET: For lightly pounding the likes of veal scaloppine and other meats that can do with a touch of tenderizing. Also good for cracking garlic, cloves, whole spices and so on. Make certain that the bottom surface is flat and not with a "claw" pattern. Available in both brass and stainless steel. Prices vary widely, depending on metal and weight of mallet. About 523.

SALAD DRIER: The best one is a Swiss import called a Rotor and made by the Stockli Company. With a pull on the belt, the inner basket spins around and freshly rinsed salad greens come out "dry" and ready for chilling in plastic bags. About $15.

METAL HEAT CONTROLLER: The best one bears the trade mark Flame Tamer. An enormous aid in creating a gentle heat and spreading beat evenly over the bottom surface of a saucepan. Helps prevent sticking. About $4.

MA STOCK

CHEESE PICK: Handy if you use a lot of grated cheeses; it breaks off pieces of hard cheeses. About $3.

METRIC SCALE: A bandsomely designed scale that measures in both grams and ounces and up to five pounds. A French import, designed by Terraillon. About $17.

PASTRY SCRAPER: Primarily designed for accoping up doughs but serves multiple duties. It is convenient for lifting quantities of foods and for scraping surfaces to make them clean. About $3 to $5.

KNIFE SHARPENER: One of the best is a small, handy, easily stored gadget called Zip-Zap. About $3.

OVEN THERMOMETER: There is nothing more wayward than the average home oven. The only way to be certain of an exact oven temperature is a thermometer. It's beatproof.

CHINOIS: A fine-meshed strainer to remove lumps-if any—in custards and batters and sauces. It gives a smooth and silken texture to sauces, About $13.

LEMON ZESTER: For carving "twists" for martinis or grooving lemons; it gives a ceat pattern to slices for WIRE WHISK: Essential for stirring, especially to prevent lumping when making sauces containing flour. About $3.50.

KITCHEN TIMER: Available in many shapes and sizes. The choicest can be set for minutes and hours as well. Prices vary.

Most of the gadgets and utensils recommended on this page are available at one or more of the following stores: Altman's, Bloomingdale's, Gimbels. Macy's and the Bridge Kitchenware Corporation, 212 East 52d Street. The meat mallet, chinois, tripod food mill and rotary can opener are available at Bridge Kitchenware.

PASTRY BRUSH: Fairly wide, for brushing off flour and brushing on such things as egg yolk and butter. Good for brushing butter on toast before baking and broiling. Get one that's dishwasherproof. Prices vary according to quality.

JUICE EXTRACTOR: What is needed is one that will squeeze almost all citrus fruits—limes, lemons, oranges and grapfruit included. The one we prefer is made by Braun and has two "squeezer" heads—a small one for limes and lemons, a larger one for oranges and grapefruit. It works by squeeziog down. About $30.

COFFEE MILL: Things are seldom what they seem. We have the Braun version but prefer it for grinding such things as spices, coriander seeds, cumin, allspice—even peppercorns. About $20.

CORK EXTRACTOR: There are many kinds around, but we are coovinced that the best is an old-fashioned design, the kind with the wings that open as the screw is inserted and pulls up the cork when the wings are pushed down. About $2.80 and up. Way up.

SCRUBBING BRUSH: The name is Lola and it is probably the best all-purpose scrubbing brush to be found. It has a long-lasting (and replaceable) head and whisks clinging food particles from pots and pans in seconds. Good for dirty sinks too. About $1.50.

CUTTING SLAB: Preferably one made of polyetheylene. One of the best on the market bears the Joyce Chen label. It won't coip and won't subject knife edges to any more punishment than wood does. These boards come in a variety of sizes; the most convenient size for home kitchens is 171/2 inches by 10 inches. About $15.

Treatment of Impotence Focuses On Attempts to Reduce Anxiety

Carried Control of the Carried Control of the Contr

mpotence, the insbility to achieve or sustain an erection, is a far more common problem than most men realize. An estimated 10 percent of men are impotent all the time and as many as 50 percent have poteocy difficulties some of the time. Impoence can be one of the most emotionally devastating things to happen to a man. The problem may result n severe anxiety, depression, mantal discord, and may even lead to suicide. While it is a fairly common com-plaiot, however, impotence is among the most treatable of sexual problems, often through brief therapy.

Potency is the result of a fragile reflex response. An erection results when spaces inside the penis fill with blood as a result of psychic, sensory and neurologic stimuli. It is an automatic response that cannot be willed. But psychological factors such as fear, guilt or hostility can inhibit it, as can physical disorders that distort hormone levels or impair the blood supply or the transmission of nerve messages to the penis.

Nearly every man, at one time in his life, finds that his body refuses to cooperate with his emotions. Stress, worry and fatigue are frequent causes of such "transient" potency problems. They are so common as to be considered within the range of normal sexual

Unfortunately, many men think they are the only ones to whom this happens. The first time it occurs a man may become anxious and begin to question his manhood. In his next sexual encounter, his anxiety about what happened the previous time may actually cause a repetition of the difficulty; setting up a vicious cycle of psycho-genic—caused by the mmd—impo-

enced man married and found he was impotent. Afraid that he could not satisfy his wife, he did not even at-tempt intercourse. His problem was solved by lengthy discussions with a physician who tried to enhance the patient's sexual knowledge and instill confidence in his sexual ability.

¶A S1-year-old man gradually lost his ability to maintain erection, though his sexual desire remained strong. He had had no sexual difficulty in 30 years' of marriage. He continued to be bappy in his marriage and his job. Medical evaluation showed that his difficulty was a consequence of diabetes, which had damaged his nerves. ¶Another man had a blood-vessel disease that was apparently contributing to intermittent impotency. How-ever, he became completely impotent after learning that his wife was unfaithful; he also became angry, anxious and depressed.

When impotence is caused by emo-tional difficulties within the individual or associated with the particular relationship, the problem usually can be corrected through psychotherapy.

In at least 10 percent of the cases the cause is "organic," or physical—the result of some underlying disease, surgery, the use of certain drugs, including alcohol, or the physical degeneration that comes with old age. In some of these situations, too, impotence can be cured—for example, by stopping the use of the drug.

Even when the cause is organic, there are likely to be complicating psychological difficulties and they are often the resolt of the potency problem itself. As Dr. Steven B. Levine, psychiatrist at Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland, points out, "a mild organic problem may become severe when the man begins to worry." In such cases, a combination of treatments may be needed to reduce the difficulty.

The treatment of impotence should begin by establishing the probable cause. If the man still has sexual desires but is impotent under all circumstances—with all partners and during masturbation, and fails to have erections during sleep or upon awakeoing
—It is likely that the problem has an organic, or physical, basis. The man should be checked for possible underlying diseases, such as alcohol-ism, diabetes, beart, lung or kidney disease, previous prostate or urological surgery, or trauma to the spinal cord. Any of these can cause impotence.

Potency-reducing drugs include alco-hol, heroin, morphioe, injected estro-gen, reserpine and related drugs (used to treat high blood pressure), barbiturates, high doses of such tranquilizers as chlorpromazine and other phenothiazines, MAO inhibitors, and-according to some reports-cigarette

Among the psychological causes of impotence are deterioration of the human relationship, an unresponsive or uninterested partner, anxiety, fear. anger, guilt, depression—and sexual-misinformation.

Doctors and sex therapists havefound that simply evaluating the situation helps some couples by reassuring them, correcting misinformation and removing communication barriers.

Treating psychological impotence focuses on reducing the anxiety that surrounds the couple's sexual interactions. According to sex therapists at the University of California, Los A: , stead of trying to force .... # Dick Smothers, Winemaker

By ROBERT LINDSEY

In California's rolling, redwood-dotted Santa Cruz Mountains, Dick Smothers is trying to decide these days what to do with his 1929 Ford, his 1937 Ford, his 1950 Ford station wagon, his 1956 Cadillac, and his 1963 Porsche.

The Smothers Brothers are breaking up, and the dark-haired half of the comedy team needs the space in the 35-foot by 25-foot garage to make wine. Mr. Smothers is doing what a lot of serious wine buffs dream about opening his own winery. But he emphasized that he means to make money, not just wine.

'I'm not in it to rip off people, but I'm not in it just as a hobby," Mr. Smothers said recently. He said that his financial situation would give him "a few years" to develop the business, but that he wasn't rich.

"We made a lot of money, but I spent most of it having a good time," he said.
"And, I made a lot of investments that didn't work out."

If everything goes according to his timetable, the first vintage of three premium white wines—pinot chardon-nay, johannisberg riesling and syl-vaner reisling — will be bottled under his label after the 1977 grape harvest

It won't be called Smothers Brothers Wine but Vine Hill Wine, a reference to the winery's locale in California's Santa Cruz Mountains.

Mr. Smothers has purchased a 40year-old, 16-acre vineyard near the Pacific Coast about 400 miles northwest of Hollywood. The site is not far from, Salinas, the hometown of Dick and Tom Smothers, and San Jose, where the brothers got their professional start more than 15 years ago while attending San Jose State College.

The region has long been one of California's major wine growing areas, ever since a Frenchman, Paul Masson, brought grapevine cuttings from France and planted them oo the slopes of the Santa Cruz Mountains more than a cen-

Nowadays, many of the grapes produced here are sold in bulk to big, highvolume corporate producers such 'as Almaden Vineyards, San Martin, Wineries, and to the smaller Paul Masson Corporation. But, hidden within the folds of this scenic mountain raoge, a ridge that . separates fast urbanizing San Jose from Santa Cruz, Watsonville and Monterey, there are dozens of small, low-volume premium wineries. Many produce only a few hundred or a few thousand cases of premium wines annually—particularly chardonnay and riesling among white wines, and pinot noir and cabernat sauvignon among red wines. Under California law, a wine needs to have only 51 percent of a varietal grape such as pinot noir to be labeled as a varietal; but the small premium wineries here geoerally use 100 percent of the grape varietals in their products and avoid mass production techniques.

Some of the wine bottled in such wioeries is sold to knowledgeable local people. Others are marketed through selected wine shops or to win afficionados by mail order. Many command high prices; wines made by one area producer, David Bruce, sell for $12 a bottle. Mt. Eden Wineries, another premium winery in the area, sell its wines for as much as $22 a bottle.

Mr. Smothers speaks with pride about the region, and the wines it yields. "It's the best there is, especially for white wines," he said.

"The reason this area is so good, and better than Sonoma and Napa [wine-growing regions north of San Francisco] is that these grapes like cold marine air; they like the fog, the drop in temperature, and then they like the rise in temperature, and for some reason, this is what stimulates them and makes the quality of the grapes so

The Smothers Brothers, who say they are tired of doing their long-running act, plan to wind it up during a fourday Las Vegas appearance between Christmas and New Year's Day.

Dick Smothers, a car buff who has spent some of his time and money on the sports car circuit, said, "I still like to drive real quick," but said he bad probably gotten car racing out of his system and had replaced it, so to speak, with wice.

In conversation, he appeared to be knowledgeable about wines and wine making and to have given thought to such things as cash flow, overhead, taxes, and other economic facets of running a winery.

Although he will run the business, he said, "I won't be the winemaker; I'll hire on oenologist as a consultant, guys who get 30 bucks an hour. You need an expert."

At least initially, he said that he expected his vineyard to produce about 1.000 to 1,200 cases of wine annually; he also said that he hoped to earn a reputation for quality among wine aficionados and to retail the wine at $5 to $6.50 a bottle, by mail.

Mr. Smothers lives down the road from his vineyard on a 30-acre piece of property with his wife and a daughter, 16, and two sons, 11 and 12. The wine will be produced on this property, probably in his big garage.

"I'll either move the cars, which are all restored, or sell them, depending upon my finances," he said. He said that the original idea of buy-

The first four wines came with the first course, a magnifi-cent jambon de hayonne. The second four wices came with the msin course, a fillet of heef, and the last three were served with the cheese.

"There is no reason why we should not enjoy ourselves," said Henri Martin, a director of Latour, owner of Chateau Gloria, Mayor of St. Julien-Beychevelle and organizer of Each group of wines was removed before the next group was poured, but the cellar master of Latour, who served them, would pour any of the 11 for anyone interested in back-tasting. There was no spitting and, since the wines were mostly excellent, quite a hit was consumed. "We are happy," said Jean-Eugene Borie, who owns Haut-Bataillev and Ducru-Beaucaillou, "but we are certainly not drunk."

No, hur it was a good thing we ate the meal while we

At the end of the meal, or at least before the soufflé and sauterne, the names of the wines were revealed: Chateau Gloria, Haut-Batailley. Lynch-Bages, Beychevelle, Ducru-Beaucaillou, Petrus, and the five first growths, Haut-Brion, Lafite-Rothschild, Latour, Margaux and Mouton-Rothschild.

The first four served were Gloria, Haut-Batailley, Lynch-Bages and Beychevelle, Next came Ducru, Mouton, Margaux and Haut Brion. Finally: Petrus, Lafite and Latour. After anticipating the event first days, the first group seemed disappointing — fine wines, but not extraordinary wines. But the second and third groups changed all that.

By universal agreement, Chateau Petrus was the best. It had depth and power — all the hest wines did — but it was rounder and more pleesing than the others. It was easily the wine most ready to drink among the best ones in the tasting

Chateau Latour was second. Most of the tasters felt it had really not yet developed — that it might be five years before it was ready to drink. It was the hardest of the wines and had the least forthright bouquet.

The disappointment of the tasting was Chateau Beychevelle, which often manages to compete with the biggest name wines. In this case it was really the poorest wine in the lot. It was brown, thin and sharp. In short, far over the hill. Chateau Gloria did not fare too well at this tasting either; it, too, was past its prime.

Almost without exception, the first growths got the highest ratings in the tastings, although not everyone ranked.

Almost without exception, the first growths got the nighest ratings in the tastings, although not everyone ranked them the same way. The writer's ranking went like this: Petrus, Lafile, Haut-Brion, Latour, Margaux, Mouton, Ducru, Beaucaillou, Lynch-Bages, Haut Betailley, Gloria, Beychevalla

Later, someone said that Beychevelle was going through Later, someone said that Beychevelle was going inrough a bad period in the early 1960's and that the vineyard had been considerably replanted since then. Short-lived merlot grapes were replaced by cabernet sauvignon. Most of the wines of the great chateaus are a blend of cabernet and merlot. In Pomerol, where Petrus is situated, and in St. Emilion merlot predominates in the Medoc and the Grayes. Emilion, merlot predominates. In the Medoc and the Graves, cabernet is more important.

No tasting is completely fair to the wines involved, if only because of the limitations of the tasters. The 1961 tasting, by presenting the wines in an ascending order of prominence, undoubtedly favored the first growths served that and They may be the served the near the end. They may even have benefited hy being drunk with the cheese.

No matter. It was a memorable occasion. No wine enthusiast would quibble about the conditions, when offered an opportunity to sample 11 great 1961 bordeaux.

When Home Is One Room

By LISA HAMMEL

Think small.

Lots of New Yorkers do, by choice or necessity, when they decide to live in a single room.

But four walls need not an urban prison make, according to Molly Siple and Jon Naar, who have studied some of the methods used by one-roomers to expand a claustrophobiac's nightmare ioto a citydweller's cosmos.

Miss Siple, a magezine decorating editor and a designer, and Mr. Naar, a photographer and writer, live in single rooms by choice. He is into ecology and energy-saving. She regards a single room as an enviroment amenable to control.

And they are keen scholars of the way others have adapted to limited space—both those who exercised and others who invoked the expertise of designers, decorators or architects.

Take beds, for example. According to Miss Siple and Mr. Naar, who have pooled their findings about the indoor space race in "Living in One Room," (Random House $10.95 hard-cover, $5.95 paperback), few one-roomers turn to convertible sofas or studio

Many of them indulge in the luxury of a real bed, and it is often a big bed, integrated with the room rather than hidden.

Some place the hed on a platform; others fill one end of the room with a throw-covered mattress that invites synaritic lounging. Still others look, if not lo heaven for inspiration, at least in the direction of the ceiling. They hulld lofts, which double or triple as libraries and music areas.

One man has devised an ingenious trundle hed concealed beneath a seating platform. And, refuting the idea that a single room means solitude, others make provision for overnight guests, using units that pull out from under shelves.

Like beds, tables must have versatility in a oneroom apartment. When not in use, tables can be fold-down, fold-away, pull-out or expanding. In use, they can be a desk, drafting table or conference tehle hy day and the scene of gustatory delight hy night. In essence, the single room requires something of a magician's skill, because many of its contents are part of a vanishing act. Storage, it seems, hrings out the Houdini in everyone.

One man hangs clothes in garment bags in a mobile rack. When he needs space, the rack rolls to another part of the room. Another person makes his belongings vanish inside boxes, which he turns into seats providing them with cushioned surfaces

Some people use storage chests as coffee tables; others, lacking a wand that confers invisibility, build high shelves to remove clutter from eye level. Mr. Naar has turned a closet into a darkroom and stores photographic equipment under a platform hed. Miss Siple, whose room is 13 by 18 feet, expands the environment through the use of mirrors.

Not all is sweetness and light, according to oneroom denizens, many of whom were present at a recent party at Miss Siple's. Some complained of always having to put things away or risk being "swallowed up" by them; others lamented the lack of privacy for visiting children. One man rued having to move furniture every time he opened a closet or a door, and another said he missed having space for all the marvelous things people spend their lives col-

At Stave the prices range from $45 for a 160-piece classic cut to $385 for a 66-piece fantasy cut, though some special orders can be more. Mr. Richerdson said that some customers had orders for as many as two puzzles a month and that one had spent as much as $6,000 a year for puzzles.

Mr. Richardson, who has a degree in mathematics, became a game creator after he was laid off from his job at a computer company in 1970. He said he was approached by two families, who were customers of Par Company Ltd., a famous New York puzzle concern and a favorite of the carriage trade. The families were afraid the craft would die out end with it their supply of puzzles. One founder of Par, John N. Henriques, died in 1972 and the other, Frank Q. Ware, wanted to retire. The two families lent Mr. Richardson some Par puzzles and he started in 1974 Mr. Richardson and a friend, who later sold out, opened Stave Puzzles, only to discover that Par had been given to Arthur Gallagher, a cutter with the company for many years. He changed the part of Par Picture Puzzles. changed the name to Par Picture Puzzies, moved the company to North Massapequa, L.I., and works alone. Fred Werner, a composer and arranger who used to rent Par Puzzles in the days when the company still had a lending service, opened another company Catseyepuzzles, in Santa Monica, Calif. The supposedly dying craft was not only alive, it was proliferating.

Mr. Gallagher is calmly cutting on, uocoocerned about the competition. He said he was only 54 years old, and did not intend to retire or to teach anyone else the art of puzzle making. He will not tell what kind of glue he uses, what kind of saw, other than to say it is an electric jigsaw, or where he buys his wood. No photos can be taken in his workroom. "There is only one Par puzzle," said Mr. Gallagher. Mr. Richardson said it took him two years to learn the craft, experimenting with different woods, glues and cutting techniques. This year he trained an associate, Mrs. Orem, who has designed many of the silhoutte pieces that appear in each puzzle.

Cutting a puzzle, he said, was a 30step process that involves gluing an imege-usually an art print or a lithograph-on wood, cutting it free-hand and sanding and polishing the wood, which consists of four layers of hass wood and a fifth layer of African, ribbon-striped mahogany. The last step is to initial and date a piece shaped like a small clown, the Stave logo.

"The trick of cutting a puzzle like this is to make the pieces optically similar but very different," he said. "And it took time to develop a smooth, rhythmic flow to our style so that typically it makes the puzzle very difficult to work with."

To make the puzzle more difficult, no picture is provided on the box and it is labeled with a misleading or phony title. For example, a picture of a whale with a harpoon on its side was labeled "hole in one." Extra straight-edged pieces and corners, known as crooked corners, are thrown in to mislead cus-

In one case, Mr. Richardson said, an Arizona woman ordered six successive puzzles for her aister, each more difficult than the previous one. For Thanksgiving she ordered a puzzle made of a limited edition print of Morria, the cat seen io television commercials. To confuse her, the piecea for Morris were left out. The woman wrote ordered a Christmas puzzle and urged Mr. Richardson, he said, to "really aock it to her." For her Christmas puzzle, a chariot scene, tiles on a back-ground wall are made into a miniature puzzle. "It's just gouna be horren-dous," he said. "The poor woman is just going to go crazy. She'll love it."

"It's a lot of work to cut out puzzles, so it gives us plenty of time to think up crazy ways," he said. "This is the way we vent our frustration on the customers. It's very hard work, so we want the customer to work, too. We doo't hold back. We really get vicious."

Once, however, after cutting up Andrew Wyeth's painting "Christina's World," he looked at all the identical pieces of the wheat field and enclosed a bottle of aspirin. "We were so awed by our own work," he said, "we thought we'd better send something."

He said that Stave was striving to add new tricks to the puzzles. This year, he said, they added limericks-in effect, puzzles within puzzles. "There was an old man of Nantucket," said one puzzle, "who kept all his cash io a hucket. But his daughter named Nan ran away with a man, and as for the bucket, Nantucket."

With all the difficulty he has had learning the puzzle-cutting craft, Mr. Richardson has become as secretive as Par. A glossy catalogue shows Mr. Richardson and Mrs. Orem at work hut it has a few crooked corners of its own. The jigsaw pictured is a 40-yearold model that they do not use. A glue ground, but they do not use that kind of glue on their puzzies. A jar of their "secret" formula is mislabeled with meaningless numbers and letters. "We in the puzzle business are a little paranoid," said Mr. Richardson. "There's no way I'm going to let any-

ALL him Eric. Or Dmitri. We have to call him something, and he has never been satisfied with his real name, which is like Bill or Pete or Tom, a thin name, almost a pronoun, all, edge, lacking a dimension, oo muscle, no hair, no fet pads. Dmitri he associates with the calisthenics of the soul in 19th-century Russian novels. Eric he associates with those sexy television commercials for Scandinavian cigars in the early 1960's. Eric sounds serious and sincere, while not being quite so gloomy as, say. Soren.

gloomy as, say, Soren.

Anyway, Eric had to go to Chicago. On the whole, he preferred never leaving New York. And if he had to leave New York, he wanted to go to some other imperial city, Paris or Rome or Baghdad, where the citizens knew that they were at the center of things. But it is aomatimes necessary—no one had ever explained why—to go to Chicago, which teems with people wearing plastic identification hadges pinned to their lapels to remind themselves of who they are supposed to be.

Having concluded his business in Chicago, Eric presented himself early et O'Hare Airport for what he thought of as re-entry. Would New Ynrk this time have diacovered in his absence that it could not along without him? Then were time to have get along without him? There was time to huy a book, a aort of print pill one takes to dissolve the sense of dislocation. And so he made his mistake. It is easy to say in retrospect that he should have purchased a copy of "The Hite Report" and found out how American women really feel about sex.

But Eric wasn't sure he really wanted to know how American women really felt about aex; it seemed an invasion of their privacy. Besides, the mystery of Woman was one of the few things he worshipped, along with the energy of New York and the prose of John Cheever. Instead of "The Hite Report," he bought a paperhack collection of John Cheever short stories called "The Brigadier and the Golf Widow." Thus equipped, he was ready to he airborne, the mind a particle on the jet stream, the body atrapped down for the inspitable steamed steak and the course. down for the inevitable steamed steak and the conso-

There was a delay on the ground. Why is there always a delay in Chicago, and never a delay in Paris? Eric read. By mere chance—and there is nothing more terrible in this world than mere chance—what Eric read was a story of a man whose gift, nr trick, for getting along in life inexplicably deserts him. Now, this is characteristic Cheever: dark currents in the resimpling root skeletons in the liquor rents in the swimming pool, skeletons in the liquor closet, domesticated desperation, plaintive Sisy-pheans on a plastic slope, losing their grip when luck, or charm, runs out.

But Eric was disquieted. The man in the story hadn't a cloe as to why the world suddenly mistrusted or actively disdained him; why, for instance, on going to a cocktail party in the luxury apartment house of friends, he was directed by the doorman to the service entrance. How had he managed before? He couldn't remember, although he was trying to even as he returned at night to his suburban estate and his own dogs devoured him.

Luck, charm, chance, dividends from trust funds, accidents of hirth, the roll of the dice of the genes, fingernails of DNA, credit cards of e hlameless personality—all canceled. Your license is revoked. You have been found out. According to the C.I.A. or Ralph Nader or Sigmund Freud or Hua Kuo-feng or "The Hite Report" or God, you are now and always have been unserious and insincere. At last in the sky, and rather shaky, Eric asked the stewardess for two of those little toy bottles of Scotch. The stewardess hated him.

Why? He hadn't asked for extra ice. He'd said please. Courtesy was his coin, and inoffensiveness his style. But she hated him, and he knew it. In his style. But she hated him, and he knew it. In the lamp of her loathing, he was paralyzed, like a rabbit on the road at night in the lights of a truck. He tried, and failed, to hate her back. (He admired stewardesses; they are competent.) You are constructed of nylon and plywood, he thought. But she wasn't. Except in her dealings with him—a Scotch bottle snatched away before it had been entirely emptied the steamed steak unside down—she tirely emptied, the steamed steak upside down—she was the personification of perkiness, Mary Tyler Moore on rollerskates.

Good Lord, it had happened. Cheevered, just like that, as though his life were an anecdote to which he had forgotten the punchline, and they sneered.

The approval of strangers was crucial to Eric; he survived because of it. Which is why he made sure to have exact change for huses, was a conscientious overtipper in taxicahs and restaurants, talked to women at dinner parties about their children, knew how to be sad when it counted, showered once a day, remembered to say I love you.

Playboys in Brazil Kiss, Tell All

By JONATHAN KANDELL

During a recent television program in Rio da Janeiro, Ibrahim Sued, the leading Brazilian society columnist, was interviewing the country's reigning playboy, Francisco (Chiquinho) Scarpa, a 25-year-old multimillionaire, about his must recent exploits.

The discussion got around to royalty, and Chiquinho rather unsubtly suggested that a leading European aristocrat had found him irresistible. When Mr. Sued gallantly protested that the young woman was a paragon of virtue, Chiquinho replied, "That's what you think!"

The old saying has it that gentlemen do not kiss and tell. The Brazilian variety does, however. On talk shows, in society columns, on magazine covers and in prematurely printed memoirs, Brazilian playhoys are revealing all—and in excruciating detail.

The older Latin American generation-whose gifts tn world wnmanhood have included such luminaries as Porfirio Rubirosa of the Dominican Republic and ss Forther Runiross of the Dominical Reputing and two other Brazilians, Baby Pignatari and Wallinho Simonsen—are aghast at the flamhoyance of the younger contenders, whose behavior they denounce as indiscreet and unsportsmanlike.

... And Games of Words ...

Dealing with words on a level that analysis would probably ignore are the word games that have proliferated in recent years. One of the most creative purveyors of them is Selchow and Righter, the makers of Scrabble. They didn't stop after making

This year the company introduced an interesting variation—a natural for anybody looking for a gift to buy a child just before his bar mitzvah. It's Scrabble in Hebrew ($8). For much younger children, there's Scrabble Sentence Game for Juniors ($5). It can be played in two versions. Older schoolchildren use the side of the board on which there is nothing but empty squares. They try to fill the squares with word tiles in such a way as to make the longest possible sen-educational-materials stores for teachers but now is at Saks for S5. The game is made by the Rolling Reader company in Westport. Conn. It consists of seven cubes and an hour-glass with saod in it that lasts about four and a half minutes.

You toss the cubes and, before the sand runs out, make as many sentences as possible. But not necessarily as much sense as possible: "That pretty grandpa found my toy too" is a sentence, right? Supposedly there are 500,000 possibilities.

... And Heartbeats, Heartbeats

For the preverbal set, there's some very primitive communication on the market. Norman Bundek, a father whose child would not sleep, had tried everything, including placing the baby in an infant seat on the dryer and putting a sneaker in the machine to produce a regular thump, thump, thump.

That, of course, was intended to sound like the soothing womb. Mr. Bundek got a little closer to the womb however, wheo he decided to record on a cassette the beating of a heart. He says it works. And you can buy 28 minutes of heartbeat for $7.98 by writing 10 him at P.O. Box 5782, Mission Hills, Calif. 91345.

His cassette joins a far more elaborate recording that has been selling for a 'year or so-"Lullaby From the Womb" by Dr. Hajime Murooka. The record, from Capitol ($6.98), reproduces the sounds of a mother's main artery and veins, resulting in a surging thump that resembles a pile driver at a construction site. The thumping is played alone and m combination with symphonic music such as Schumann's "Traumerei."

It is said to be most effective with children under a month old. We tested it, a bit unfairly, with a 2-month-old. He did not doze off. However, we can report unequivocally that the record sends 31-

All About: Buying The Right Umbrella

By FRANCES CERRA

ne of the minor mysteries of civilized living is what hap-pens to all the umbrellas that people lose - or do they really lose them?

"Not a soul ever lost an umbrella," said Julius M. Schwartzenberg, as a big grin spread across his face. "I have my meo out all the time stealing them."

hir. Schwartzenberg is the president of the Association of Umbrella Maoufacturers and Suppliers and one of the owners of the Hero Umbrella Company. A short, dapper man, he has been in the umbrella business for 30 years, and his business thrives because people do lose umbrellas probably more often

Sales pick up, of course, during spells of bad weather—"That's good weather." Mr. Schwartzenberg insisted -and really boom during an unex-pected downpour. That's when um-brella vendors suddenly show up on the city's sidewalks, (On cold, windy days they're out selling ski hats.)

The umbrellas sold on the street are likely to be the popular, striped type that look to the untrained eye like any other golf-style umbrella. They usually sell for $2 and $3. But one umbrella maker contended that these are poorly constructed and are often not properly waterproofed.

What distinguishes a good-quality to the first puff of wind? How inexpensive can an umbrella be and still be serviceable? Conversely, what makes an umbrella worth $30 and up?

First of all, it is necessary to distinguish among the various kinds of umbrellas on the market today. Among them are:

The traditional slim umbrella. This is usually made of tightly woven ny-lon and comes in a sheath of the same fabric. The men's version is commonly dark and conservative, with a standard 25-inch rib. The women's style has a . 20-incb rib.

QOversized umbrellas. Sometimes referred to as unisex umbrellas, these coma in colorful patterns, usually do not have a tight-fitting sheath and are favored with today's casual clothes. The ribs are 24 inches long, making them acceptable both to men who have traditionally carried large umbrellas, and to women who see no reason why they should have less protection from the rain than men. Some of the most fashionable models are made of treated cotton, which can be printed in brighter colors than nylon, and have wooden tips on the rib ends. The golf-style umbrellas fall into this

4Shoulder strap umbrellas. A relatively recent innovation, they solve the problem of how to carry an um-brella comfortably when it isn't rain-ing. Versions on the market have straps made of elastic webbing, rattan and macrame. They come in both standard sizes and oversizes.

Windproof umhrellas. No umbrella can resist the force of a realty strong wind, but windproof umbrellas that are blown inside out can be returned to their original shape. There are two kinds: the elbow-action type, which comes only in a 19-inch size, and a spring type, which can be any size.

GFolding umbrellas. The original mushroom-type folding umbrella is still on the market but the drawbackshard to open, harder still to fit back ioto the case—have been overcome in automatic-opening types that telescope out and spread open at the touch of

Once a person has decided on what . type of umbrella to buy, the questions about quality remain. According to Mr. Schwartzenberg, one of the most ohvious signs of poor workmanship is the cut of the cloth of the umbrella. It should fit perfectly, which means that it should not be so tight that the umbrella is difficult to open (which would make it likely to tear) and not so loose that it bags between the ribs (which could cause the tight) (which could cause the tips of the ribs to come off). Patterned fabrics should also match at the seams.

Mr. Schwartzenherg said that there is no easy way to judge an umbrella's structural strength.

"The number of ribs isn't necessarily related to an umbrella's strength," he said. "An umbrella with 16 ribs cao be as weak as one with eight."

Similarly, the weight of the metal should not be used as a criterion, he said, because lightweight metal can have great tensile strength. And it doesn't matter, he said, whether the ceoter rod of an umbrella is made of metal or wood.

Mr. Schwartzenberg, whose company is one of the six largest umbrella manufacturers in the country, said that the best advice he could offer was to buy from a reputable store, because if an umbrella turns out to be defective, it can be returned. Obviously, that rules out street vendors.

A reputable retailer, he said, will regard as legitimate any complaint about a handle coming loose, rib tips that keep coming off, or a popped "head wire." The head wire is what holds the top of the ribs together oo the inside of an umbrella, A well-made umbrella need not be expensive, but a person should expect to pay $10 for one made in the United States. So far as serviceability is concerned, more money will not get you a better-made umbrella—but it will buy fashion, status and luxury. Gucci, Christian Dior, Pierre Cardin and Anne Klein all design umbrellas, and they cost more. If you really want luxury, however, visit a specialty store such as Uncle Sam Umbrella Shops, of which there are four in Manhattan. Uncle Sam spccializes in custom-made and unusual umbrellas and has an impressive collec-tion of antique handles that can ba made into an umbrella to your speci-

The shop at 110 West 45th Street contains the workshop for all four stores, and a showcase holds a display of wonderfully carved ivory handles, as well as handles made of sterling silver. gold, china and carved wood. A box-wood handle, carved in the shape of a wolf about to spring on its prey, was tagged at $275. The ivory handles cost about $75. Uncle Sam also sells silk umbrellas that start at $50.

Uncle Sam Shops will also make an umbrella from fabric brought in by the customer. Depending on the frame chosen, such umbrellas cost between $15 and $45. You can also have an umbrella personalized with ioitials and even an astrological sign.

Mrs. Howard did oot go on. An extra man, of course, must be unmarried. Consequently, Mr. Goelet, helr to a realestate fortune, president of the Milseum of Natural History, presideot of the New York Historical Society and past president of the New York Zoo-also said that while there were always , the perennial extra men, there were also the extra meo who showed up only for a season or two. Then they got married.

"I have an advantage," Mrs. Portago said. "As an adult, I've lived on three continents, and through circumstaoces have access to different circles. I mean I don't have to rely solely on that New York group of extra men. If I did, my choices would be narrowed down considerably."

Middle Eastern diplomats are now very big as extra man, Scandinavian diplomats, meanwhile, are coming into prominence, and some hostesses think there will be a boom in them next seasoo. Young unmarried doctors, but never dentists, are favored by some hostesses, while writers and publishers are almost always good. Just about any positing Texas oilman, whether he has bee or not will be invited on while titled Europeans, especially the British ones, are considered best of all. in general, widowers are more sought after as extra men than di-vorced men. This is because widowers are thought to have cleaner pasts and more promising futures. Homosexuals, of course, have always been prominent as extra men, even though some hostesses have reservations about them.

"The problem with homosexuals," said one hostess who would rather not be identified, "is that when there are too many of them around they'll dominate the evening. They'll dictate the. topic they want you to talk about."

For years, Serge Obolensky, the public relations man, was generally considered the dean of extra men. Then he got married. Jerry Zipkin, the photographer, is possibly the dean now. John Richardson, the art dealer and historin. is big as an extra man, al-

"Yes, now that I've been relegated to the dustbin I think John might be the new king." Mr. Goclet said. "Actually, it doesn't matter to me."

Cyma Rubin said. Mrs. Rubin, a theatrical producer and frequent hostess. said that she never had a need for an extra man. She said that she always told her unattached guests to bring someone with them.

"But for most hostesses, the extra man is essential to living. Theo there s always the possibility that the extra man will get interested in the hostess herself," Mrs. Rubin said. "That's why so many hostesses will rarely have women at a dinner party who are more attractive than themselves " through his first season as an extra man, said he thought this was true. "I meet attractive women at dinner parties only when the bostess is a very secure person berself," he said thoughtfully.

Nonetheless, the divorced man said, he will continue going to dinner parties because at the very least it beats eating alone. This is good news to some hostesses, one of them Mrs. Howard. "I have a list with the names of 30 or 40 unattached men on it," she said. With some of them I put down the man's age 100.

Mrs. Howard said that once an extra man she had been expecting for dinner that night called her in the morning and said that he couldn't come. She said she had then called 19 other emra men, but that she had had no success until she got to number 20. Naturally, Continued from Page C1

Most heginners feel safest with what might be called indexed buying. In or other words they like to huy something that has a known market price: one that can be checked with auction prices, books of reference or a quick telephooe call. They also like to be quite sure what they're getting. If that is your state of mind, a good general print shop is the place to go to.

One such shop is the A.A.A. Gallery at 663 Fifth Aveoue (at 53d Street). Sylvan Cole has been in the business sioce 1946. He knows all there is to know about prints, he doeso't stick to the hig-price names, he's never too busy to talk, and even the smallest sale still sets him beaming from ear to ear. It's a pleasure to deal with him. You can still get something good at the A.A.A. for under $100; but, there as elsewhere, it's good policy to go a little higher than you can really afford.
Indexed print-buying—safe buying, in other words—can take you into

But just as it's good policy in a European capital to go for the cheapest room in the best hotel, so it's well worth while to go to somewhere like the Kennedy Galleries. 40 West 57th Street, where for $100 or so there are some very pleasant surprises that woo't get you into trouble at the bank. Sir Thomas would say, "I never tire of them."

It takes a lot of style to flout expectation io quite that way. But the point is that mainline art is not the only thing worth putting on our walls. If we think of a good marriage as one in which two free spirits just happen to prefer one another to anyone else, then it makes sense to have walls that change from time to time and are full of things that didn't cost much money but mean a great deal to one or both ous print-houses on the European model. There aren't too many of them in this country, but Phyllis Lucas's printshop at 981 Secood Avenue (at 52d Street) and the Old Print Shop at 150 Lexington Avenue repay investigation.

Any shop where prints are filed under categories (legal, topographical, military, medical, for instance) and not under artists' names is promising ground if we know what we want and doo't need the security of a famous oame. Secondhand bookstores like the Argosy at 116 East 59th Street often turn out to have a print section that doesn't look like much but is full of curiosities at a knockdown price, (Even one dollar can be enough.)

Country auctions and smalltown antique shops are worth scouring, too. By no stretch of the imagication, for instance, can I see myself owning one of the boxes by Joseph Cornell that are among the most imaginative artworks of the last 50 years. But one day in a shop in Sag Harbor I came upon a cache of astronomical maps of the kind that Cornell sometimes used in his hoxes. They cost nothing at all, and we bought them. "Why, yes," said the owner of the shop (which by the way is no looger there), "those maps come from the Cornell family house, not so far away."

If you like photographs, as most everyone does nowadays, the Witkin Gallery at 41 East 57th Street has a large miscellaneous stock and the kind of conversational atmosphere in which a stranger feels at home. If you like 10 put rugs on the wall, you should make your own: nothing in the Calder show at the Whitney Museum is more seductive than the rugs that Mrs. Calder made herself. In fact, the only limits to what we can do with our walls are the limits to our imagination, our historical sense, and our feeling for fun.

Alicia de Larrocha, Believe Consistent Win-

By DONAL HENAHAN

ONG before anyone could have known how the acoustical surgery on Avery Fisher Hall would turn out, Alicia de Larrocha was chosen to be the first pianist to be heard there in a solo recital. Nothing could have been more logical. The Spanish musician's recitals in the old, unlamented Avery Fisher Hall were among the few unequivocal triumphs in that artistically depressed area. So what could go wroog in the rebuilt

Nothing, as it turned out yesterday afternoon. Miss de Larrocha played another of the remarkable recitals that have made her an idol of the New York plane-worshipping tribe. The au-dience overflowed onto the stage, where several hundred seats had been set up, and if that disconcerted the notoriously shy planist it did not show up in her playing. When was the last time, for instance, that any planist created pandemonium with Mendelssohn's "Variations sérieuses"?

The Mendelssobn variations are be-loved of pianists, but audiences do not usually take to them quite so wildly. The knowledgeable ones lean forward expectantly at the 12th Variations, for instance, with its fearsomely difficult pairs of repeated chords for alternating hands, and Miss de Larrocha's machinegun staccato and incredible accuracy did not disappoint them. But the per-

AX NEUHAUS'S "ROUND: Sounds for Concave Surfaces" was a sound installation in the rotunda of the old United States Customs House on Bowling Green this weekend. It was designed to make an attractive musical statement at the same time that it was calling attention to the building itself. To judge from the crowds-unusually large and heterogeneous for an avantgarde musical event-it succeeded in both tasks admirably.

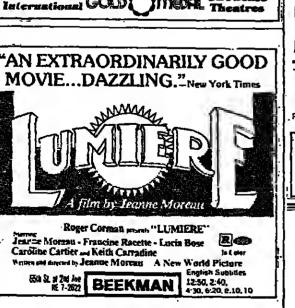

The rotuoda is a large oval space with marble the prevailing surface; the acoustical result is grand and echoey. In the middle of the space is a smaller oval area surrouoded by a counter-high marble wall. Within that area Mr. Neuhaus positioned 32 loudspeakers in a pattern of eight wheel-like spokes, in-tersecting at the center, with four speakers per spoke:

made brief, effective appearances in the two "Godfather" films. She's a real actress, genuinely touching and funny as an incipient spinster who comes late to sexual life. She's so good, in fact, that she almost gives weight to Mr. Stallone's performance, which is the large hole in the center of the film.

Mr. Stallooe'a Rocky is less a performance than an impersonation. It's all superficial mannerisms and movements, reminding me of Rodney Dan-gerfield doing a nightclub monologue. The speech patterns sound right, and what be says is occasionally lifelike, but it's a studied routine, not a character.

It's the sort of performance that could have been put together by watching other actors on television. Most of the film was photographed on location in seedy. Philadelphia neighborhoods, and it's one of the film's ironies that a production that has put such emphasis on realism should seem so fraudulent.

The problem, I think, comes back to Mr. Stallone. Throughout the movie we are asked to believe that his Rocky is compassionate, interesting, even heroic, though the character we see is simply an unconvincing actor imitating a lug.

"Rocky," which has been rated PG ("parental guidance suggested"), contains some barroom language and a climactic boxing match that is effectively brutal.

"EXHILARATING TERROR"

the Academy Award nomination she got in 1975 for playing the part of Connie Corleone, Al Pacino's headstrong, sluttish sister in Mr. Coppola's "The Godfather, Part II," didn't help erase from some minds the notion that she was just a big director's little sister.

Those days are probably gone. The reason is "Rocky," a John Avildsen film that opened here yesterday about an aging, down-and-out, hoxer (played by Sylvester Stallone) who almost becomes world champion. Miss Sbire is so convincing as Adrian, the hero's painfully shy girlfriend, that from now on she will be thought of in terms of her talent, rather than her brother.

"I've even thought about changing my name back to Coppola," the sloeeyed, 29-year-old actress said the other day in a suite her brother owns in the Sherry-Netherland Hotel. "I used to use it, but then Francis got famous, and I didn't want to seem like I was trying to cash in on his fame, But now I don't think he would mind. And hesides, I think a woman should keep something of her own."

Ugly Duckling Transformed

Miss Shire, who is married to David Shire, the Hollywood composer, plays Adrian in a manner reminiscent of the schoolteacher role Betsy Blair played in "Marty." Adrian is a plain, hespectocled, 34-year-old pet-shop salesclerk who lives with her brother and has seemingly never had a date. But after meeting Rocky, she tosses aside her glasses, fixes herself up and turns into

"It's the best part I've ever had." Miss Shire said, looking like a schoolgirl in a white shirt, and argyle plaid sweater vest worn over a wool plaid culotte. "Whenever you see a transformation or a metamorphosis, when people go from here to there, it's exciting to play, because people like to watch change.

Miss Shire said that in preparing for the role of Adrian, she worked mostly oo the "outer statement," meaning how she thought the character should look. She bought a pair of old-fashioned glasses (with her own prescription in them; she is very nearsighted); dug up some stained sweaters from her own wardrobe, and bought a tacky gray wool stocking cap from a bargain base-

"Everything about Adrian was mousy and lower class, although sensitive. she said. "I felt she was the kind of girl who probably would not make it through high school. You see those women all around you; they go from heing young to old, with no middle age. They take care of their mothers or their brothers or their cats -- or nothing.

Miss Shire bristled a bit when it was suggested thet she got the part in "Rocky" because of her brother. "I got it because I was called to audition, and went in and gave the best reading I bad ever given in my life," she said.

But for the first time I went in there. and I was a little gold. I had just had a baby-he was six weeks old-and ne was very sick after he was born, and I fact spent a lot of time in the hospital, and all that Hollywood stuff, that career stuff, had been cleaned out of me. So I thought, 'So what if I'm rejected? It really doesn't matter.'"

The actress said she had been almost as shy as Adrian when she was growing up in Lake Success, L.I., and attending Great Neck South High School.
"I was painfully shy," she recalled.
"Whenever sameons looked at me, it felt like an energy impact. My physical nody would feel it! Sometimes when I thought I was going to be late for school, I hid in the casement all day, I still cannot walk into a room if I

Her other memories of Lake Success, she said were of growing up as the only oaughter in e male-dominated Italian-American household; of being poor and going to school in Miles shoes; of heing terrified of Roman Catholic schools, and of getting a strange pleasure out of self-denial.

"I used to go alone to the Radio City Music Hall at Christmas time." she said with a strange smile. "I'd stand and wait in those loog lines, and then when I finally got to the ticket booth, I'd turn around and go to the end of the line again. There's a real thrill in denial. My whole life has been

And that's why, she said, she could never bring herself to tell her brother Francis, now 36, that she seriously wanted to be an actress. "Everyone wanted something from him," she said. "I didn't want to hurt my relationship with him, which was tender and complex hecause I was the girl in the family end a lot of my own creative desires had to be routed behind those of the males in the family. So I entered into a position where I said I didn't want to be an actress, and didn't want anything from him. So I was kind of unmotivated as an actress, unaggressive and unassuming, and nobody ever knew I was serious about it."

Then one day she summoned up enough nerve to tell him she'd like to for a part in the first film of "The Godfather." He said no. "He was not a secure power at that time," she said. "and ne was very young. And I think maybe he was scared for me. What if I was no good? And I think be saw Connie Corleone as kind of a maid. I certainly didn't see her that way."

Meanwhile, Mr. Coppola went off to Britain and Miss Shire was called to do a screen test for "The Godfather" for Robert Evans and Mario Puzo. By then, she was using the name Talia shire. "Evans chose me," she said 12 excitedly, "and when Francis found good, he was scared that I'd fail. He was under enough pressures already."

But she didn't fail, and she went on to appear also in "The Godfather, Part II." for which she was nominated for best supporting actress. An hour after the nominations had been announced, she learned she was pregnant with Matthew Orlando, now 14 months.

"You know, Francis never did say anything about my Oscar nomination," she said matter-of-factly, "But he did say, 'Coogramlations oo your pregnan-cy.' That's just the way he is. He thinks women should stay home and have babies. He's never told me to this day whether he thinks I can act. My sisterin-law will say, 'Francis says you bave some abilities,' but he just can't say it."

Miss Shire, "Tally" to her family, is the youngest of three children of Carmine Coppola, the arranger-conductor who won an Oscar for his score for "The Godfather, Part IL" The other son is August, 40, a former professor of comparative literature at the California State University's Long Beach College. He is now writing a novel.

After having been raised by a composer, MIss Shire was also married to one, six years ago. She and her busband and young son live in Sherman Oaks, Calif. The curly-baired, 38-year-old Mr. Shire composed the music for such films as "The Conversation," The Taking of Pelbam 1-2-3" and "All the President's Men."

Met at a Hollywood Party

The Sbires met at a party in Holly-wood, where Miss Shire, then known as Talia Coppola, bad moved after two years at the Yale School of Drama. She quickly appeared in a string of forgettable movies, including "The Dunwich Horror," "Gas-S-S" and "The Christian Licorice Store." She recently played Theresa, the carty wife of Tom (Nick Nolte) in the ABC-TV novel-fortelevision, "Rich Man, Poor Man."

Do the Shires' careers ever conflict? No," she replied. "My career does not dominate the house. You could walk in and not see anything to indicate that I was in the actiog business. Growing up the way I did, I was prepared for marriage and to live anonymously. I learned oot to have the focus on me."

Still, Miss Shire sounds like a closet feminist at times. Right now, for example, she is working on a comedy script for Roger Corman, the producer who gave her brother his start, about an actress who kidnaps several big male stars because she thinks that's the only way she can get any good movie parts.

"Eventually, I'd like to direct," she said, "and then I'd like to get to a certain position where I could help other women get going. There are so few good roles for women today, and the only way that's going to change is if women start writing and directing. You know, I'd like to head a studio and be a moguless, in the most positive sense.

And what would Francis Ford Coppoia say about that?
"Make me my breakfast!" she said, laughing.

Kennedy Center official put it.

By RICHARD EDER

In Washington people talk rather fast and walk rather slowly. As in New York, the sidewalks fill up with a morning crowd of pedestrians, but Washingtonians look as if they'd had eggs for breakfast. Maybe it slows them down.

Maybe it's an illosion. The blocks are loog here and the buildings are generally spread out. They swim by very gradually, In New York, if you're walking somewhere, the destination pops up at you at the last moment. In Washington, you see it at least a quarter of an hour before you get there. It's a dreamlike feeling.

Even the taxis move slowly. Are they under instructions to make the city look bigger?

It is the kind of observation that a New Yorker cannot help making and that a Washingtonian will fully expect from him. A visitor exploring the city'a cultural life comes very quickly across the claims, firstly, that developments over the past years—new museums, the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, the growth of theater and art galleries—bave turned Washington into a cultural garden; and, secondly, that New Yorkers persist in regarding it as a desert.

It will be explained that New Yorkers are like that. Washington's cultural growth bas, in fact, been immense, but it is still a place where people point to a clump of trees, and say: "Look, a forest." New Yorkers look at bald patches in their own woods and say: "Look, a desert."

At least one Washington critic suggested that the lukewarm New York critical reception of "A Texas Trilogy" -which was rapturously received at the Kennedy Center—was caused by jealousy. New Yorkers, it was said, could not accept the idea that a great play could originate in the binter-

Washington is certainly no desert; the question may be whether it is more of a garden or a flower shop. There are elements of both. A Morris Louis show, currently at the National Gallery of Art, is a reminder of the presence bere a decade ago of the Color School of painters. The Corcoran Gallery of Art, which has been revitalized under Roy Slade and Jane Livingston, ia putting on a show of five younger Washington artists, and the Georgetown galleries are full of the work of local painters on what might be called the pre-Cor-

The Arena Stage, which keeps expanding and now has three separate theaters, has developed one of the finest reportory companies in the country. It is currently doing a three-hour, uncut version of Shaw's "Saint Joan." It is a beautifully constructed, sinewy per-formance; one that New York would be lucky to have the chance to see. Among its strengths are Laurie Kennedy as a bubbling Joan and then a bony one and Robert Pastene as a superb Cauchon.

spectacular events come in from the outside. Critics of the Kennedy Center, which is the behemoth of Washington culture, accuse it of being nothing but an overgrown booking house. This is demonstrably untrue: Roger L. Stevens and Martin Feinstein, who run it, have originated dozens of productions there as well, of course, as bringing in such things as La Scala and the Berlin Philharmonic.

Although there are times, particularly just after an election, when the real business of Washington is real estate, as a rule, it is politics.

Politics can help culture—as in the establishment and financing of the National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities-but the city's monomania drains some vitality away from it. A museum curator told a dinner com-panion who was a lawyer that he planned to go to Europe in June to look at galleries. "But Congress is still in session," she protested. By PETER G. DAVIS

ICKRAN ATAMIAN, winner of the 1975 Naumburg Piano Competition, gave an extreme-ly well-received debut recital last February. Saturday night the 21-year-old pianist returned to Tully Hall, reinforcing the impression that be is not only unusually gifted, but is also a very individual musical personality. On a purely visual level, Mr. Atam-

Sine Nomine In Chorales

Chorale tunes-whether newly composed, or derived from folk, secular or Gregorian sources—were the build-ing blocks upon which most German baroque church music was constructed. By prefacing three Buxtehude Cantatas with the chorale melodies on which they were based, and introducing Bach's "Christ Lag in Todesbanden" with two earlier versions of its chorale tune, the Sine Nomine Singers added a fascinating lesson io musicology to a concert of singular distinction.

Saturday night's program, at the Kzufmann Auditorium of the 92d Street Y.M.-Y.W.H.A. was the first in a series of three by this outstanding profes-sional choir and its energetic director, Harry Saltzman. Crisp accompaniments were provided by the violinists Yuvan Waldman and Helen Hagnes, the violists Linda Moss and John Lad, the cellist Judith Davidoff and the harpsichordist Edward Smith.

The three Buxtehude works offered considerable internal variety: "In Duici Jubilo" simple and serene; Auf' robust and jauntily imaginative in its interplay between chorus and five solo lines (three vocal, two violin); "Herzlich Lieb" longest (at 21 min-utes) and most anguished in its expressive content.

The choral singing was exemplary: light, cleanly defined, meticulously shaped, although Mr. Saltzman's decision to use the full complement of 13 men and only 5 of the 10 women in "Wachet Auf" left the balances there rather bottom-beavy.

With all due respect to Buxtehude, the Bach Cantata proclaims an infinitely greater creative genius, and it provided a number of performing high-lights as well, including a gorgeous duet for women's voices, and a creditable account of the crucial bass solo by Joseph Duchac.

lumbia Records. Shelter accused Columhia of signing her while she was still legally obligated to record for Shelter. As soon as that argument had been settled, in Columbia's favor, she was involved in legal wrangling with her manager. He received a cash settlement, and no longer manages ber but the case has yet to be entirely resolved. The managerial battle was still going on almost two years ago, when she was married to Phil Kearns, who had been singing with her. It was then that she recorded her first Columbia abum, "Second Childhood,"

'Until You Get It Right'

Last June, before she hegan working on ber third album, "It Looks Like Snow," Miss Snow and her husband and daughter moved from their high-rise apartment in Fort Lee, N. J., to

"It was a frenzied, desperate kind of move," she said, "We're still going through a period of adjustment, but I wanted to get the baby out of the cold climate. She'd bad a very tenuous and traumatic birth, we didn't know if she was going to live, and she needs intensive physical therapy. Here in the North, I was afraid to take her out-of-doors, and the warmth out in L. A. really seems to be good for her."

Domestic arrangements have been restructured around necessity. Mr. Kearns, who used to tour with Miss Snow and contribute striking harmony singing stays home and helps a nurse singing, stays nome and neips a nurse with the haby. He is writing songs and working on a career of his own. "I tried flying back and forth during the tour," Miss Snow said, "because I missed them terribly, but all that flying around, plus the fatigue from touring around, plus the fatigue from touring. ing, made me weaker, and I got sick. Still those were stolen moments with my baby, and I grabbed 'em."

The strain surrounding her daughter's fight for life has left its mark. "I let myself go physically," she said, shift-ing self-coociously in her mother's chair. "I've put on too much weight. But I'll deal with that. The main thing is that I'm a lot more together than I was two years ago. The harsh reality of what life is all about has been driven home to me. I was taking life for granted, and letting a lot of really beautiful things slip through my finder. gers. You have to live day by day, and learn. Physical life, being incarnated, is for learning and you keep learning to live until you get it right."

Looking for a Hit Single

Another strain on Miss Snow's career has been the lack of a hit single to follow "Poetry Man." Her second al-hum was a heavily arranged affair, with excellent singing on jazz stand-ards and Snow originals but a certain incoherence in some of the lyrics. "It Looks Like Snow" comes closer than the earlier albums to capturing the complete range of Miss Snow's music, from an acoustic country blues in the style of Memphis Minnie to rock, discofunk and straight pop. The six original songs are compelling, finished pieces of work, with one, "My Faith Is Blind," emerging as a particularly striking autobiographical statement.

"It's a spiritual song," Miss Snow said, "about the hody sometimes being inadequate when torrents of kinetic energy are trying to get out. And it's about the body being the temple of your soul." In the song, she sings, "my crumbling temple/needs sweet repairs."

Miss Snow's tour will be resuming soon, and she hopes it will help the album and whatever single Columbia decides to release from it. She is delighted with the company, especially with Bruce Lundvall, CBS Records Group president.

"He mode me sit down and listen to Lester Young [the late jazz saxophon-ist]," she said. "And when I did, it was like I had been listening to him for years. I was even singing some of his phrases, probably hecause I picked them up from Billie Holiday. Who are my other recent musical infatuations? Frank Sinatra and Dinah Washington and—are you ready—Ethel Merman, for being such a showstopper. I'm getting into that now myself. But to get back to Bruce, he really knows and loves music. And I'm with Management Three now, and nappy with them. You know, this time things might really be OK."

oronto, Nov. 21-The National Ballet of Canada initiated its 25th anniversary season with a series of performances that ended here last night at the O'Keete Center. Only two ballets were performed: a revival of John Cranko's "Romeo and Juliet," already reviewed, and a new staging of Sir Frederick Ashton's "La Filla Mai Gardée." which occupied the second balf of the two-

With this production of the Ashton masterpiece, the National Ballet of Canada, under its hrand-new artistic director, Alexander Grant, has taken a triumphant move forward. The ballet is being given with three casts, and the Canadians in all of the 25 years of struggle and achievement have never danced better.

"La Fille Mal Gardée" is hardly new and definitely not Canadian—not even Quéhécois. It is one of the great ballets of our time, created for Britain's Royal Ballet in 1960. Its music and its theme are taken from various sources, some of them going back to the original 1789 version by Jean Dauberval, and two or three mime scenes, remembered by Tamara Kasarvina, date from the Maryinsky Ballet of St. Petersburg at the beginning of this century. But the ballet itself is a modern creation by Sir Frederick. Wby, then, should it be such a landmark for Canadian ballet?

Despite the success of "La Fille Mal "Gardée" in 1960, Sir Frederick bas resolutely resisted most attempts by other companies to persuade him to give it to them for their repertories. He did give it to the Royal Danish Ballet, which botched it, and more recently it was staged by the Budapest Opera Ballet, apparently with great success. But to North American companies asking for it, hitherto, Sir Frederick has always given a polite negative.

Now with Mr. Grant as director of the Canadian ballet, Sir Frederick changed his mind. After all, Mr. Grant was the creator of Alain, one of the ballet's leading roles, and over the last 30 years, together with Dame Margot Fonteyn, he has been the dancer most creatively concerned with the great English choreographer. So wbat was not possible for anyone else was clearly possible for Mr. Grant, and -Sir Frederick's "La Fille Ma! Gardée" has entered a North American reperavid Edward Collins, a violinist who was formerly assistand concertmaster of the Milwaukee Symphony, and John Gates, a pianist on the faculty of Indily revealed their predilection for unusual programming. Mr. Gates made his debut in 1966 with sonatas by Dukas, Dussek and Sarabji: Mr. Collins relebrated the Ives centennial two years ago by playing all four of the violin sonalas at the same concert.

It was not surprising, then, to find these artists honing in on neglected repertory at their joint appearance late. Saturday afternoon at Carnegie Recital Hall. On the list were sonatas by Daniei Gregory Mason, Mrs. H. H. A. Beach, Cecil Burleigh and John Powell, all American composers born in the latter part of the 19th century, end a hravura
"soliloguy" for unaccompanied violin
written for Mr. Collins in 1974 by Rus--- seli Riepe.

Tune detectives—or at least style detectives—would have bad a field day with the sonatas, and their sundry reminiscences of Tchaikovsky, Reger, Strauss and perhaps most consistently, Brahms. Yet they are all solidly con-structed, attractively melodic scores that deserve resurrection, with the Mason sonata (published in 1913) well ahead on points because of its genuine warmth of expression.

The Powell and Beach works go on too long, although they have interest-ing moments, as does the more concise. Biblical sonata "From the Life of St. . Paul' by Mr. Burleigh.

The performances by Mr. Collins and Mr. Gates did not boast much subtlety of rhythmic or tonal coloration but they were forceful and dramatically potent. The violinist was especially effective in Mr. Riepe's virtuoso showpiece, which begins with variations on an Appalachian hymn and ends up sounding like a square-dance fiddler gone slightly berserk.

This would have been interesting enough, but what makes it of major importance is simply how well the company dances the ballet. Admittedly it is a reproduction—the Canadians still after a quarter of a century do not have a major creation to call their own-but it was precisely reproduced, and danced virtually as well as it is by the Royal Ballet ..

In both choreography and construction is this one of the great ballet classics. The dramatic tone is perfect, but the choreography itself, with its bucolic charm, its effortless bravura, even its plethora of ribbons, is all full of love and life. There bave never been two more realistic young lovers in ballet than Lise and Colas, unless they be the lovers in another Asbton masterpiece,

The Two Pigeons."
As Lise and Colas the Canadians presented three casts. Perhaps the best, at least in this first series, were Karen Kain and Frank Augustyn, who ap-peared in the first performance last Wednesday. They were both brilliant but buoyant, with a natural sense of fun and bumor. Stephen Jefferies, a newcomer to the company who had given the role previously with the Royal Ballet, acted beautifully and danced with great elegance.

Neither Mr. Augustyn nor Mr. Jefferies was technically flawless at the performance I saw (the first had besitations in his major solo, and the sec-ond traveled across the stage danger-ously in his last-act coda), yet both can dance the role with space to spare, and were stylistically elegant.

Mr. Jefferies's Lise was the bighly in-telligent Veronica Tennant, who was clever, apt and delicious. Physically her dancing is not ideally suited to the role—she lacks those ideal feet that it really demands—yet her acting carried all before it. Nadia Potts, the third of the Canadian Lises, is extraordinarily English in her approach, and proved the most typically Royal Ballet-style Lise, although her performance on the whole needs a sharper definition to match its elegance and correctness of style, Her partner was Tomas Schramek, who partnered well and gave a most engaging portrayal. He was technically slightly less adept than his two col-leagues, yet there was a marvelous joie de vivre to his performance.

It was not merely in the major roles that the Canadians proved so exciting. Everything seemed to have been re-studied. Charles Kirby's Thomas, the father of the village idiot who is betrothed to Lise, gave a performance of great depth, and his alteroate, John Aubrey, in a quieter fashion, was also

The two Widow Simones-Lise's -Constantin Patsalas and, particularly, Jacques Gorrissen, were excellent, and particularly enchanting were two young men, David Roxander and David Allan, who alternated, at all performances, as Alain (Mr. Grant's old role), the Cockerel and the Notary's Assistant. These two were brilliant, and a wonderful indication of the kind of talent, in depth, that now is to be

The Despair Of Elly Stone

Elly Stone, who is best known for her interpretations of Jacques Brel's songs, sang only one in the show she presented Friday and Saturday at the Bottom Line. She sang only one Brecht-Well medley. But the songs she offered were as sophisticated mu-sically and lyrically, as the works of these composers, and some of them were considerably more sobering.

Miss Stone is a theatrical singer with a straightforward musicality that transcends artifice. The songs are is working with—most of the lyrics are by Harold Blau, most of the music by Mort Schuman, Robert Kessler or Nick Meyers—are as "adult" as legitimate musical theater gets. Frank, despairing, many of them suffused with an almost suicidal hopelessness, they are perhaps most striking purely as pieces of music. Minor key melo-dies in a Weill vein suddenly bubble over into flashes of ragtime, rock or jazz, only to subside into melancholy

Peter Phillips's arrangements play the rich sound of David Moore's cello against precise cabaret rhythms, rolling piano ostinati, and occasional choral effects from four backup singers, while Miss Stone's high, precise vocal lines sail over the mix. She deserves a hearing, but her repertory is not recommended for anyone wbo is given to houts with depression.

Narrowing One's Options Dangerous, but Spectacular

By ROBERT BYRNE

Because chess is to a great extent a subtle interweaving of options, it is strange and surprising to see a strong player make an irrevocable commitment to a concrete line of attack in the early stage of a game. Telegraphing your signals to your opponent is usually a result of ignorance or bravado, but when it succeeds, it produces an awesome impression.

Normally, efficiency demands the retaining of options; the more lines of attack the opponent must guard inst, the thinner must be spread defensive forces. Nonetheless, such a game as that between the American grandmaster Lubomir Kavalek and the Russian grandmaster Vitaly Zesh-kovsky from the Manila Interzonal Tournament proves a striking excep-tion to this conventional wisdom.

When Kavalek advanced 14 P-K5, it was very like Babe Ruth pointing to the center field wall and then putting his home run there. This 14 P-K5 was extremely committing in that, break-ing White's pawn front, it created an excellent blockading square at Black's Q4, while also ceding the black QB an enormous open diagonal.

A Bare Bodkin for Black

Moreover, the white center pawns became fixed, presenting Black with an enduring target in any end game that might arise. All the same, the white that spelled out in neon lights, "I'm going to mate you."

While Zeshkovsky put pressure on the center with 14 . . . QR-Q1 and 15 . . . N-B3, Kavalek mobilized a mating Kavalek had to yield the QB file with 22 . . . R-B1; 23 R/1-Q1 since simplification would have been fatal to his designs. But wby, after 24 B-Q2, did Zeshkovsky not keep the white bisbop at bay with 24 . . . P-QR4?

THE FACE OF BATTLE. By John Keegan. 354 pages, Illustrated, Viking, $10.35.

OHN KEEGAN is a senior lecturer in war studies at Eng-land's Royal Military Academy at Sandhurst. John Keegan, like most Europeans under the age of 45, has never been in a battle. So John Keegan has turned to military history to discover and convey to his students what being in a battle is really like. And, in so doing, he has discovered an interesting point. Most traditional military historians don't tell very much about what being in a battle is really like. They tell who won. They puff up the winner or rationalize why the loser lost. They offer the perspective of the generals and staff officers. But they don't individualize the experience of the average man in the line. And so, Mr. Reegan concludes in "The Face of Battle," what is needed is a new approach to military history—an "inquisitional" approach in place of an 'accusatorial" one (to parallel the distioction between the French and English judicial systems); or one that seeks to inquire what exactly happened instead of pronouncing verdicts on the final outcome. At least this seems an interesting point when Mr. Keegan applies it to Agincourt. We tend to think in pre-cisely those "who-won?" terms of the traditionalist when we contemplate the battle that took place between the English and French on a ploughed field in northeastern France on Oct. 25, 1415. The triumph of Henry Va nomadic forces over the superior numbers commanded by Charles d'Albert. The victory of archers over a heavily armed feudal array. "We few, we happy few, we band of brothers." And all that.

Details Are Revealing

So the details of the battle that Mr. Keegan brings to light are a revelation.
To learn that the field was muddy from rain that had fallen during the night; that many of the English had diarrhea but could not leave the field to relieve themselves while they waited for the French cavalry to charge; that the bar-ricading stakes had to be resharpened once they were driven into the ground because—of course!—they would have had to be pounded at their points; and that a crucial factor in the French loss was the "ripple effect" created by the retreating cavalry passing through the advancing men-at-arms (an effect Mr. Reegan observed himself in a newsreel of a runaway police horse charging into a crowd during a London Vietnam de-monstration)—all this not only puts a reader into the picture with a vengeance; but makes for exceedingly dramatic reading as well.

Edifying too is Mr. Keegan's reconstruction of the Battle of Waterloo, although here his inquisitional opproach is not so dramatic, because the battle was too complex to be understood from any single point of view. (Of course this is exactly one of the points about the evolution of warfare that the author is trying to develop.) But something goes seriously wrong with his approach when he gets to the third and last of his reconstructions-the > first battle of the Somme. Most of what Mr. Keegan tells us about the trench warfare fought between the English and Germans on July 1, 1916, seems very familiar—the horror of going "over the top"; the terrible casualty rate among those who charged across "no-man's land"; the nature of the wounds inflicted by ar-tillery bursts and machine-gun fire; the stupidity and waste of it all, and yet the bravery with which the English went to their deaths. We have read about it-not in official military histories perhaps, but in a multitude of diaries, memoirs, letters, biographies, novels, and poems. We have seen it in films and heard about it from eyewitnesses. Indeed what we long for is exactly what Mr. Keegan is trying to avoid: some sort of overview, a key in how this battle tied in with all the others fought along the Western front, anything, in short, to relieve the sense of futility that trench warfare makes us

By CHRISTOPHER LEHMANN-HAUPT

A Matter of Timing

What then has gooe wrong with Mr. Keegan's apparently interesting thesis? seems obvinus: He has simply erred in applying to 20th-century warfare a critque valid only for battles that took place in the more distant past. But Mr. Keegan is far too clever to fall into such a simple trap. In fact, he has almost anticipated this objection by making clear in a masterly "History of Military History" preceding his reconstructions, that only recently, with the arrival on the scene of the American military historian S. L. A. Marshall, have accounts of hatties began to appearable accounts of batties begun to approach the breadth and authenticity that Mr. Keegan is demanding.

Moreover, after completing his re-constructions of Agincourt, Waterloo, and the Somme each of which was larger in geographical scope than its predecessor, and all of which took place within about 100 miles of one another-he draws any number of salient conclusions about the development of warfare, among them that batties may now have grown obsolete because regardless of future technological developments the strain of warfare on the human psyche has already reached its

Well, it may be that military historians have not yet learned to convey what battle is like, and it may be that in advancing the art Mr. Keegan has written a complex and sophisticated book. All the same, although I, like Mr. Keegan, have never been exposed to battle, something had already told me as much as he does about what modern warfare is like. Perhaps the military historians need to catch up. and no doubt "The Face of Battle" will assist them in doing so. But then again - to paraphrase Clemenceau perhaps military bistory is much too serious a matter to be entrusted to the military historians.

Music: Choros Woodwind Quintet in Debut

The Choros Woodwind Quintet, which first joined forces at Juilliard in 1974, made its New York debut Saturday afternoon in Carnegie Recital Hall. The group chose a pleasantly offbeat program that included music by Danzi (Quintet, Op. 56, No. 2), Andrew Thomas (Two Studies), Janacek "Maladi" Suital Rantoon ("Raccek ("Mladi" Suite), Bentzon ("Racconto" No. 5) and Milhaud ("La Cheminee du Roi Rene").

Although far from easy to play, none of these pieces are overtly virtuosic, and the Choros Quintet performed them all in a friendly, relaxed manner. The group sustains a venderfully mellow, homogeneous, intonationally sweet ensemble blend without refining away any of the spicy dynamic cootrasts that lend a fresh musical spontaneity to their interpre-

Technically, Janacek's tricky 'Mladi" ("Youth") poses many subtle problems in rhythmic coordination all of them neatly solved in this infectious readthe harmonic piquancy and clever coloristic effects of the Milhaud suite with relish.

The members of the quintet are Leonard Logatin flute; Diane Lesser, obce: David Stevens, clarinet, and Janice Dewolfe, and Kim Laskowski, hnrns. Dennis Smylie, bass clarinet, added his instrumental expertise to a first-rate performance of the Janacek composition.

omething nice for the children before 9 P.M., something terri-tying for the adults after 9 P.M. — despite a recent court setback for the "family hour," the programming pattern seems to be holding rather firm.

Tonight at 7, poblic television's "Once Upon a Classic," which has just ended a nifty series on "The Prince and the Pauper," begins a six-part dramatization of Johanna Spyri's "Heidi." At 8:30, CBS has a balf-hour devoted to Camille Saint-Saëns's "Carnival of the Animals," done in ani-"Carnival of the Animals, done in animation and live performance with Michael Tilson Thomas cooducting. And at 9, NBC's Monday Night Movie is "The Savage Bees," wherein the population of New Orleans begins to be eaten alive by a particularly oasty strain of African bees emigrating from

The "Heidi" series, another import from the British Broadcasting Corporation, is predictably done to a charming turn. The on-location settings are stunning. If those steep green hills aren't the Swiss Alps, they will do as a very convincing substitute. Tonight, the orphan Heidi is dumped by her autof on the deorsten of her grandher auot on the doorstep of her grand-father. The aunt is off to Frankfurt for service with a wealthy family. The grandfather has become a misanthropic recluse sioce the accidental death of his son Tobias, who was Heidi's father.

The old man is crotchety but is quickly woo over by the cheeky high spirits of Heidi, who is played by 10-year-old Emma Blake, the kind of youngster whose updaffected naturalness raises suspicions that certain child actors are really shrewd dwarfs. Miss Blake is a delightful combination of innocence and sauciness. And, as usual in British productions, the sup-porting cast is incredibly good. The neighboring boy Peter is played by

story. And Peter's blind grandmother is beautifully performed by the late. Dame Flora Robson, in what must have been one of her final roles.

CBS's "Carnival of the Animals" was produced, directed and written by Chuck Jones. That is, the cootext for the Saint-Saëns composition was written by Mr. Jones. The lyrics, which are the best element by far, were written by Ogden Nash, With Warner Bros. Television in the producing act, this version takes the form of a Looney Tunes cartoon. The duo pianists are Tunes cartoon. The duo pianists are Bugs Bunoy and Daffy Duck, with voices supplied by Mel Blanc.

There are a number of cute mo-ments and the animation illustrating the music sequences — the parade of lions, roosters, hens, kangaroos, among others — is pleasantly effective. But the mixture of animation and live ac-the mixture of animation and live action remains awkward.

In NBC's "The Savage Bees," it is Mardi Gras time to New Orleans. A Brazillan ship is found floating free on the Mississippi, ber 10 crew members nowhere in sight. The local sheriff, bload by Bay Tohnson float sheriff, played by Ben Johnson, finds his dog dead io a field. Officials look confused and worried. A little black girl skips off to choir practice. Hertz officials believe their affiliation with Mr. Simpson has proved successful because he exemplifies the concepts of speed, reliability and efficiency, which happen to be the qualities the company wants to project

"In this business, a car-renter's awareness of you as a company can provide a marketing edge," said a Hertz spokesman. "The perception of O.J. as being with your company makes your message about speed and relia-bility more believable."

Dealers Feel Court Ruling Won't Upset Bond Market

Over the longer run, the Court of Appeals decision was viewed as a significant benefit to the bond market generally and to New York State-related securities in particular, "Long-term, this is clearly bullish for credits outside New York City—the state itself, its agencies, authoritles and local issuers." said George C. # Money Is Outpacing British Supply Goal

LONDON, Monday, Nov. 22 tRenters) Britain's domestic money supply, a key factor in the nation's battle with in-flation, is still rising higher than the target set by the Lahor Government, the Bank of England disclosed today.

Tight money control is believed to be one of the factors on which inspectors from the International Monetary Fund are insisting as a condition for the $3.9 billion loan being sought by

Despite heavy restrictions on credit, the amount of money in circulation jumped by 11, percent in the month to mid-October.

The Government's aim has been to hold money supply growth to 12 per-cent in the financial year that began last April. But with half the year gone, money in circulation has already in-creased by 8% percent, the bank said.

The customer is in a better frame of mind and is back in the marketplace buying. Business is moving at a better clip than 60 and 90 days ago."

'The old turkey contract never

News of the new turkey futures contract was welcomed by Len Walts of the National Turkey Federation, of Reston, Va., who said in a telephone interview the other day: "Turkey growers have had a rough year, with most of them losing 10 to 13 cents a pound, because of stiff competition from broilers and other chickens as well as beef. "Retailers have been featuring beef and broilers until a few weeks ago be-cause supplies of both were plentiful." At the same time, turkey growers faced high processed feed costs, which represent two-thirds of their expenditures, Mr. Walts said. "As a result, 12-pound turkey hens are now wholesaling at 47 cents a pound, compared with 60 cents a year ago, and 16 to 20-pound toms at 47

Why Unilever Draws Wall St. Yawns

By ROBERT METZ

Unilever Ltd. (British), which is linked with Unilever N. V. (Dutch) and run as one company, posted the big-gest percentage gain of any issue on the New York Stock Exchange last Wednesday and Wall Street merely Wednesday's gain—5% points to 271/2, or 24 percent—was certainly cause for rejoicing on the part of owners of the shares that are traded as American depository receipts here. But the move was regarded as of relatively little significance though the gain followed the release of third-quarter earnings-$1.43 a share compared with 91 cents a share for the severely depressed tbird quarter of 1975. For a quick look at the stock table disclosed that Unilever Ltd. made its big move on a turnover of just 300 sharea, which Wall Street analysts termed typical of its daily volume. A day later, in fact, no trading took place

Meanwhile Unilever N. V., whose shares are directly traded oo the Big Board, gained 11/8 on Thursday to close at 441/4 on a volume of 100 shares. Neither security traded on Friday.

Some find it fascinating that one of the world's giant companies — an archrival of Procter & Gamble — with sales in a vast array of food, detergent, paper and chemical products that will total more than $15 billion in 1976, inspires so little Wall Street interest.

However, not only are the ahares and the A.D.R.'s inactive, but also there is hardly an analyst in Wall Street who follows the company closely and there is almost no institutional ownership of the shares. No single mutual fund has owned the shares or the A.D.R.'s since the second quarter of 1975.

One analyst offered his views on Unilever with the understanding that he would not be identified. He said that the low trading volume oovi-ously created a problem of limited liquidity. Anyone who wanted to sell the shares in quantity would probably take a beating, he said.

Unilever's problems go back some years, he said, to the mid-1960's, when the company's attitude was to "take care of the top line—sales—and the bottom line will take care of itself."

This became a Wall Street joke, he said, when Unilever's earnings remained flat for a number of years. In recent years the profit trend has improved somewhat, but there was a "violent interruption" in earnings growth in 1975 as a result of commodity losses. In the first quarter of 1975, when prices of fats and oils collapsed. Unilever earnings hit bottom. The company absorbed heavy inventory losses.

increasingly aggressive marketing ef forts: The company reportedly carved out for itself the biggest share of one soap-detergent market in Britain and did equally well in another in France in duels with P. & G. and Colgate-

The analyst noted that Unilever was destined for problems in the early 1980's when the Netherlands 12 expected to run out of gas reserves and be faced with the choice of reconvert-ing to coal or to import oil. That will be bad for the nation's balance of pay-ments and its currency. "If the guilder falls out of bed, what happens to Unilever?" the analyst asked

The Value Line Investment Survey was favorably disposed toward both Unilever Ltd. and Unilever N. V. when its last report was published as of Sept. 10. Value Line noted that as the economies of the world had strengthened. Unilever had experienced rising profits. projected 4 to 5 percent real growth rate for the United States economy next year is "about right for business," John W. Hanley, chairman and chief executive of the Monsanto Company, said here recently in an interview.

The chemical industry executive, who has forecast record sales for the company this year, said that the current "pause" in the economy had caught up with Monsanto in some product lines. He mentioned polyester synthetic fibers in particular, conceding this business 'was in the red this year' with demand and prices running well below desired levels.

Asked whether a 4-to-5 percent rate of growth in the economy next year, given projected increases in production costs, would be sufficient to turn around situations of this kind, Mr. Hanley replied: "Give us an attractive enough business environment and we'll find a way to get our prices up."

Insofar as polyester synthetic fibers are concerned, Mr. Hanley commented that the industry "is going through a shakeout now" with prices at 50 cents a pound. He suggested that prices on the order of $0 to 95 cents a pound are needed for the industry "to have a reasonable business environment."

The Treasury's new 53/4 percent notes, which failed to get bids as strong as expected on Thursday afternoon during the credit markets' one sloggish interval last week, rebounded on Friday.

In the corporate bond market, high-grade utility bond yields dropped from 8.50 percent to 8.35 percent, equaling their low for the year first reached on Oct. 15. At this level, Ag-rated utility bond yields are at their lowest levels since February, pany annouoced some months ago that it would enter the oewsprint business with a Japanese partner as a logical diversifi-

cently that a newsprint mill these days

"has to be big to be economic and so we have to look for another market for the product. We expect to sell half in Japan." Like other observers of the industry, he notes the current "relatively soft mar ket" for newsprint at a when prices are moving up. Costs move up with inflation, he explained.

East Coast Canadian mills have high operating costs because of the small (and older) newsprint machines in use, he said. "They generally turn out 50,000 tons or ess a year. New machinery such as we will use will produce three to four times that amount."

Prices generally are set so that the high-cost producers cao operate at least at breakeven point.

A oew treod in the industry is the use

Newsprint producers are struggling to keep control of costs with larger equip-ment and such new processes. They also hope to offset decline in usage by oews-papers by selling to other markets. For example, some magazines are using news-

Tide Is Turning Against Greek Magnates | Treasury Plans As Athens Expands Its Economic Control

By STEVEN V. ROBERTS Special to The New York Times

ATHENS, Nov. 21 - Several of Greece's wealthiest and best-known tycoons are in the news these days, and the news is almost all bad.

Stavros Niarchos, the shipowner, and Stratis Andreadis, the banker, both face the loss of large parts of their industrial empires. Joho Latsis, another major shipowoer, is under investigation for his business dealings with the military junta that ruled here until July 1974.

On a personal level, a newspaper here has resurrected charges that Mr. Niarchos covered up the cause of his wife's mysterious death a few years ago. Officials ruled that Mrs. Niarchos died from an overdose of barbituarates, but stories persist that she was beaten to

Sweeping Concessions Won

Moves to control the tycoons reflects the Greek Government's belief that too much economic power rests in the hands of a very few rich men. In addition, many of these business leaders won sweeping concessions from the military regime for industrial projects. So now they are politically uopopular, and the Government feels free to reverse some of the junta's favoritism.

The Government is also trying to take a more active role in running the nation's economy. A consortium of four state-run benks was organized recently to stimulate investment io such basic industries as mining and energy. Economists here predict that the state sector of the economy will continue to expand along socialistic lines.

Greek officials frequently emphasize their desire for foreigo investment, but the tycoons' troubles have caused a tremor of nervousness in the business community. "They have given a clear signal to foreign investors," said one economist, "that every time you chenge governments you change contracts, and that's not good."

Investment has alreedy been lagging because of the tension between Greece and Turkey and the imposition of some heavy new business taxes. But the Government seems willing to take the risk in order to increase its power and its

Mr. Niarchos made a deal with the military regime in 1970 to acquire a two-thirds interest in an oil refinery at Aspropyrgos, one of four in the country. In exchange, he agreed to spend $200 million to expand and modernize the facility. The Niarchos group now says it has lost money, the state says the Niarchos group has failed to keep its bargain, and both sides have sought international arbitra-tion. # 52-Week Bills As Book Entries

By EDWIN L. DALE Jr.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21-Barring, a last-minute change of plans, the Treasury early next month will issue the world's first security that cannot be seen, touched or possessed.

It will be an issue of 52-week Treasury bills. All purchases will be recorded only as "book entries" in banks, Federal Reserve banks or the Treasury itself aod, for the first time, buyers will not have the option of taking physical pos-session of the bills. No bills will be printed.

The underlying idee is not new. Al-ready more than 80 percent of the $320 billion of outstanding marketable debt is in book-entry form under a system that has been operating since 1968. But until now a buyer always had the option of receiving a certificate-a piece of paper.

The Treesury's aim is to have not only one-year bills but also six-mooth and three-month bills converted completely to book entry by December,

Although the great bulk of bills are already in book-entry form, there were 275,000 actual bills outstanding and in the bands of the public at the end of September. According to the plan, by December of next year there will be nooe. All the present ones will bave matured by then.

The plan is oot yet locked in concrete, according to David Mosso, the Treasury's fiscal assistant secretary. Public comments, including some objec-ticos, have been received and a final meeting with "consumer" groups will take place Nov. 29. But Mr. Mosso said in an ioterview that he assumes the plan will go forward, certainly the first experiment early next month with the December 52-week bills.

In the end, the Treasury hopes to convert notes and bonds—though not savings bonds—to book eotry exclusively, as well as bills. Notes and bonds have longer maturity than bills, but most of them are already in book-entry form, too.

The new system may oot make everybody happy. There will be no more "bearer" securities, which can be transferred by one person to another without the Treasury knowing it. By definition. book-entry bills will have to be registered in the name of the

In addition, when a book-entry system is in effect for all bills, the Internal Revenue Service will begin requiring 'Information returns" for tax purposes on the interest earned, as is already the case for savings deposits and other for a variety of technical reasons. However, no one in Washington from Julius Shiskin, the Commissioner of Labor Statistics, down is disposed to brush aside deviations of the current dimensions as slight

John Tucker, chief of the B.L.S. division of industry employment statistics. explained that the bureau has been making an upward adjustment in the state figures to "correct for a known bias that is especially pronounced in the early stages of a cyclical business

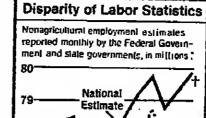

That bias, according to Mr. Tucker, results from the fallure of the state reports to reflect with sufficient promptness the formation of new businesses, both small and large, as the economy lifts out of recession. He said the exclusion of soch corporate births from the state-by-state reports had caused them to show only half the strength of the 1975-76 recovery in terms of new jobs.

justed estimates were more valid than the sum of the 50 state reports, Mr. Tucker declared that they squared not only with experience in past recessions but also with the job trend shown in unemployment insurance applications and in the Census Bureau survey of 47,000 households on which the B.L.S. bases its independent monthly report on national unemployment

A less acquiescent view of the trust-worthiness of both sets of figures was taken by the analyst who first called the spread between the two statistical series to public attention. Nicholas Kisburg, an adjunct assistant professor at Fordham University and legislative director of New York Teamsters Joint Council 16, said the disparity made him wonder whether any of the figures were worthy of belief.

Here are statistics which the Gov ernors of the various states will be using to beat Jimmy Carter over the head for billions of dollars of Govern-declared. "All the figures are derived from the same source: yet, because of an adjustment that may or may not be right, the two series come out with a difference in September that could all by itself account for one-fifth of the country's jobless. The states should not be permitted to publish figures which the B.L.S. itself says are so far

The Federal agency is already taking steps to reconcile the two series by calling on the states to revise their benchmarks and methodology in line with the Federal adjustment. Mr. Tucker predicted that the present "serious understatement" in the state-by-state job estimates would be wiped out by February or March of next year.

Charles A. Pearce, director of re-search for the New York State Labor Department, said preliminary studies here indicated a need for changes to make hoth the state and Federal figures mores accurate. He acknowledged that the state job totals tended to be understated in the rising phase of a husiness cycle and to be overstated in the declining phase.

However, other states may choose to fight in the courts rather than accept any forced change in present comput-ing standards. That is because the flow of Federal money may depend in important degree on how high or low each state's job total is by comparison with prerecession levels.

Ovaltine Hits the Comeback Trail

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY

Back in 1948 Nestlé introduced its-Quik milk additive in the United States, where Ovaltine was the dominant product Top Ovaltine management in Switzerland immediately tagged it as a loser. But today Quik has a 64 per-cent share of the $110 million market.

More recently, after Ovaltine was acquired by Sandoz, another Swiss company, its American leadership felt that the 72-year-old product's growth had reached a plateau and that the time had come to put the company's promotion effort behind its snack

Ovaltine went without advertising for five years, and the company lost money for three.

Things are now looking up, however, as Carl K. Glickmao, the engineer who joined the Ovaltine Products Company from Geoeral Foods six years ago, will be quick to explain.

Sooo after coming aboard, the president—he oow serves as his own marketing director too-decided that Ovaltine was the company's key product-a product with a fine image and a product that was still the beneficiary of years of broadcast spoosorship of such memorable hit series as "Little Orphan Annie" and "Captain Midnight." Can you imagine how many former cardcarrying members of Radio Orphan Annie's Secret Society and Captain Midnight's Secret Squadroo are out there just waiting the call to rise again?
The trouble is that they're the mommies and daddies now, while 60 percent of potential Ovaltine drinkers are in the up-to-12 group. "Our link to the franchise," said Mr. Glickman, "was with the mother. now about 35. If we didn't do anything to recapture her we'd lose the brand."

Ovaltine, the only one in its class that is vitamin-fortified, was available in malt and chocolate flavors, but some folks thought it tasted bad. In the age of Spock, Mr. Glickman said, mothers didn't push anything on the kiddies, so many bomes that had Ovaltine also stocked Quik for the young ones.

If the kids don't like the taste, change the taste—that was the president's decision. But it didn't sit too well with the parent company in Switzerland.

New formulas followed. They were tested in homes and by consumer panels. The winner-with a new flavor and quicker-dissolving granules instead of powder-went into controlled markets in 1972 and did well. Then it went into a large test-market situation in about 30 percent of the country.

Desoite the 1974 recession, the prod-

nct's increase in price and the general decline of its category. Ovaltine's pound sales increased, Mr. Glickman reports. Armed with that information, he was able to get the go-ahead from Sandoz for complete oational distribution.

Ovaltine also got a revised label and is now distributing the product with still another label, one that is designed to get across the goou-taste idea. And good taste is most of the message that is being sent out by spot televisioo, into which Ovaltine will put something in the neighborhood of $2 million. Nutrition is also mentioned.

The commercials are intended for a dual audience—mothers and children. So the spots are not seen during kiddie programming or mommie programming but during shows that appeal to both (or at least are watched by both).

In another move, which he believes has strengthened the brand, Mr. Glickman introduced two versions of Ovaltine bot cocoa mix: regular and lowcalorie. This sort of thing is known as a flanker product, and it was provided with "unibrella" advertising that

belped both products through syner-gistic interplay. (Dig that jargon.)

The advertising for all Ovaltine products—including PDQ Milk Flavoring, Poppycock, Fiddle Faddle, Screaming Yellow Zonkers and the John L. line of soacks—is handled by DKG Inc. Ovaltine has oot turoed its back on the snacks. They are being sup-ported with print advertising. Shep Kurnit, chairman of the agency, says they will get TV next year. Mr. Glick-man did oot immediately concur.

Coupon Fraud

The Federal Government has become aware of the enormity of the coupon misredemption problem and is ectively going after some of those involved to it. That information came from Paul F. Corcoran, Assistant Attorney for the Eastern District of New York, who was asked for information about the recent conviction for mail fraud of a Staten Island supermarket operator. Three codefendants pleaded guilty.

The investigation started with in-formation from Colgate-Palmolive whose coupon-clearing house in Louis-ville, Ky., spotted coupons that had been stolen in New Jersey some time before.

What the investigation developed was that there were also counterfeit newspaper cents-off coupons being mailed in for redemption, ripping off not only Colgate but also such other companies as Johnson & Johnson, Nestlé, Géneral Foods and Howard Johnson. The four persoos collected $450,000 in a year and a half.

the counterfeits to the others, who redeemed them by using the names of the six stores they operated and four fictitious ones.

The Staten Island operator supplied

The irony is that, for each coupon, they got not only the face value but also 5 cents extra for their "trouble."

Those who had large amounts in their safe-deposit boxes could face high losses. because each box was insured for a maxi-mum of only $500, the police said.

The gaping holes of the boxes were plainly visible vesterday afternoon as In the

such boxes, the police said.

Five of the six robbers were believed to have entered the lobby from the 16th floor of the hotel. Detectives said that the five had commandeered an elevator at gunpoint as they descended.

According to the police, three of the bandits left by the front door on Park Avenue and escaped by taxicab. The other three departed by a rear exit and were driven away by a seventh accomplice in a parked car.

The largest of the previous hotel rob-beries took place Jan. 2, 1972 at the Pierre, when well-dressed gunmen hand-cuffed 19 employees and guests and looted 47 safe-deposit boxes of about $2 million in cash and other valuables. Four men were eventually arrested for the

In the Plaza Hotel robbery, five baodits —also described as courteous—rounded up a dozen persons in the lobby on July 31, 1972 and escaped with $100,000 in salesmen's jewelry from safe-deposit boxes.

The Drake Hotel robbery of Dec. 2S, 1971 resulted in the loss of about $15,000. One reason that the police were not able to give an estimate on the amount stolen from the Regency was that some of the safe-deposit boxes rifled were those of guests who were away from the hotel yesterday.

The last time the Regency's safe boxes New York detectives and Federal agents were looted was in August 1970 when spent most of the day questioning the three armed robbers broke into 17 of the victimized guests and showing them boxes and also broke open a small safe.

(Which is good news for Newsweek's advertisers.)

The American Cancer Society has announced that the first winner of its Annual Media Award for the best magazine article on the subject is Newsweek for its cover story of January 26, "What Causes Cancer?"

This honor, following closely the Nobel Prize for Economics given to Newsweek columnist Milton Friedman, brings to 29 the number of awards for journalistic excellence that Newsweek has received so far this year.*

Journalistic honors are one criterion by which readers can judge a magazine.

And, as recognition of the quality of editorial environment against which advertising is seen, they are an important consideration for advertisers, too.

Newsweek, the newsweekly most quoted each year-by the wire services, network news commentators, editorial page editors and syndicated columnists —is also, to our knowledge, the recipient of more awards for journalistic achievement, this year and over the past decade, than any of its competitors in the newsweekly field.

What she was alluding to was that for the second time in a month, New York City had found itself acutely aware of its lack of burn-treatment facilities, this time for those injured in an explosion that tore through a Queeos chewing gum factory early yesterday morning.

Of the 39 persons brought to the City Hospital Center at Elmhurst. Queens, as a result of the blast, 27 had to be transferred to treatment units outside Queens. It was a reminder that that borough—with two airports and considerable industry — has no burn-treatment facilities at all.

Of those 27 victims, 17 had to be sent to burn units outside the city— 15 to hospitals outside the stateresult of a situation that the president of the city's Health and Hospitals Corporation termed "so routine that it is absolutely disgraceful."

Warning Is Repeated

The official, Dr. John L. S. Holloman Jr., had warned after the fire that took the lives of 25 persons in Broox social club on Oct. 24 that the city was unable to handle a large number of burn cases. Yesterday he repeated the warning, with undisguised anger in his voice He noted that the city's municipal hospital system had 22 burn-unit beds at Jacobi Hospital in the Bronx, seven at Harlem Hospital and eight et Kings County Hospital. But he said that because of hudget cuthacks, each of these units was operating at only half its caoacity. Four of the burn victims were sent to Harlem Hospital, and six to Jacobi. Dr. Holloman said that the city had often been forced to send patients as far as the Brooke Army Medical Center io San Antonio for treetment.

Not Living Up to Ohligation

"New York City bas not lived up to its obligation to take care of burn patients." Dr. Holloman sald. "When is this city going to realize that people do not get burned by appointment?" Yesterday's explosion and fire came

CARTER AND SIMON WILL DISCUSS CRISIS

man, said that the solutior should insure that holders of the $600 million in city notes who had traded them for M.A.C. securities should be treated at least as well as those who held the $1 billion that were the subject of the lawsuit.

Arthur Richenthal, the Flushing bank's lawyer, said he had not decided yet what to ask the Court of Appeals to do about speeding repayment. But he said he would like to see the 10 clearing house banks lend the city the $1 billion and take long-term city securities in return.

The Mayor declined to discuss the options that might be involved in a redesigned package, but be did say that he would talk with leaders of the employee-pension systems whose purchases of municipal securities had been a major element in the current package.

Air of Panic Recalled

Last year, as the dimensions of the city's fiscal problem gradually became apparent, there was an air of near-panic and frenzied improvisation among the worried-looking men, briefcases io arm, who hurried from limousioes into meetings at Gracle Mansion.

Yesterday, there was none of that.

The Mayor sat patinetly behind a small table in front of the white fireplace in the Susan Wagner wing of Gracie Mansion and told a small group of reporters that the main difference between then and now was "the sympathetic and cooperative reaction we're getting from everybody."

That included the incoming Carter Administration and the outgoing Ford Administration, he said, as well as the Carey administration in Albany.

Mr. Beame said that he had talked with Goernor Carey and that "we are going to work very closely together on this matter."

Now, as distinguished from the bleak and contentious days of 1975, there is a "completely different relationship." Mr. Beame said, "Everybody understands the importance of this problem—and everybody wants to help." he said.

On Saturday, Mr. Simon had let it be known that the Federal Government would continue the flow of short-term loans—another major element of last year's fiscal structure—that helped the city through the periods during the year wheo bilis piled up faster than the revenues arrived to pay them: In their telephone chat on Saturday night, Mr. Beame said, "I expressed by appreciation for the fact that the Federal Government will continue to make the advances."

Protection to Holders Pledged

As technicians were packing their gear and reporters were strolling out after the news conference, Mr. Rohatyn walked in. He was there to attend the subsequent private meetings with Mr. Carter's man. Orin Kramer, and with Undersecretary of the Treasury Rohert Gerard.

As the main architect of the fiscal

As the main architect of the fiscal package that the Court of Appeals had upset, Mr. Rohatyn had designed the moratorium and the accompanying offer to let the noteholders exchange the paper for M.A.C. bonds.

Now that the court had ruled that notes must be paid off, someone wondered about those who had agreed to the trade.

Their interests should be protected, Mr. Rohatyn said. "I don't want those people, the people who did the right thing, to come out worse off," he said.

But there were no predictions from anyooe, publicly or privately, on what might be done to comply with the Court of Appeals decision.

The court, in its 5-to-1 decision, made it clear that there would be no rush to force the city to pay the debt. The lenders were not entitled to immediate payments, the majority opinion said, if this would be "unnecessarily disruptive to the city's delicate financial and economic balance."

Further, the opinion noted that the state must be involved in the solution, stating that the "Legislature will shortly meet in regular session."

Mr. Beame offered just one suggestion about what he felt might be in the plan and two quick comments about what he felt must be ruled out.

"Two years ago," he said, "I said I believed that Federal guarantees (municipal borrowing were an important thing to have."

Would he ruled out new city taxes?

"Absolutely."
Would he rule out massive new service

"Absolutely."

Mr. Beame looked natty in a maroon jacket and black slacks and he showed no signs that his hurried journey back from Israel had tired him. Only once during his news conference did he show a trace of irritation.

Mayor Defends City's Record

Someone asked if he could assure that the person who had lent money to the city would not be "stuck."
"He's not 'stuck'," Mr. Beame said sharply. "Nobody was ever 'stuck.' New York City is going to pay all the debts."

York City is going to pay all the debts."

Actually, through all the tumult and the fiscal improvisations, the moratorium that the court threw out had been the only case in which the city failed to meet an obligation to a lender; the only promises that the municipal government has been forced to break were some of those that it bad negotlated with its labor

The final threads in each of the patchworks along the way customarily were not stitched until some sort of a deadline arose. So part of yesterday's calm in the face of a $I billion problem might have stemmed from realization that the Court of Appeals decision would not require anyone to do anything until sometime

Mr. Richenthal, the Flushing bank's lawyer, told a telephone caller that he had "various plans gravitating in my mind," but that before going back to the court to ask for some action he was "bopeful we could do it on a cooperative basis, with representatives of the city and the state"

He said that he was waiting to hear from government representatives.

The city government people met into the night. The first Gracie Mansion session, with Mr. Carter's man, Mr. Kramer, "went well." a mayoral spokesman said in late afternoon.

Then came the session with Underwick

Guess who's taking the controlling interest of the billion-dollar corporation?

No. It's not the little brat on his great-grand-father's knee. It's his as-yet-unborn cousin (see mother-to-be, second row, second-from-left) who'll keep it all in the family.

What we're discussing here is one of several possible ways family-owned corporations cope with estate taxes that could end the private status of a privately owned company.

"It's getting harder every day to be a big and private company," says Forbes. "Harder, but certainly not impossible." In a recent Forbes article: "In Privacy They Thrive" the subject gets a thorough going-over. It includes a roster of the country's 100 largest privately-owned companies. Also, an inventory of some of the ingenious means they employ for staying that way. And it features the names, faces and thoughts of some famous figures in this very private sector.

No wonder America's top corporate management (both public and private) read Forbes, issue after issue, with such intensity and consistency. Its editorial vitality simply can't be matched by any other magazine in the field. Consequently, neither can its readership.

Forbes comes first in the measured reading preferences of America's top management. The research firm of Erdos & Morgan made a reconfirming study of this among the top executives of 1300 of America's largest companies. The results of this study showed Forbes to be read by more of these top management executives than any other business or news magazine.

Last year Forbes was the only leading busines or news magazine up in advertising pages. Which means our gains for 1976 are gains over gains, no simply recovery figures.

But this year, with the publication of the November 1st issue, we have already surpassed our all-time record year in total advertising pages.

How many magazines in this field, would you guess, achieved that kind of record? No need to guess this time. The complete lis
